Prefabricated apartment buildings in Lazdynai, an "instant community" about four miles from the center of Vilna, capital of Lithuania.

Lithuanian Architects Displaying Innovative Design in Vilna Suburb

By CHRISTOPHER S. WREN
Special to The New York Times

VILNA, U.S.S.R.—From a distance, the high-rise towers of Lazdynai seem to float above the surrounding pine forests. Up close, they turn into traditional Soviet prefabricated apartment buildings.

Yet that is Lazdynai's appeal, for the residential district of 42,000 residents has been laid out in the northwestern outskirts of this Lithuanian capital with a creativity found in few other Soviet cities. Lazdynai represents part of a broader effort under way in the Soviet republic of Lithuania to give housing its own personality.

Housing remains one of the nation's most pressing needs, not only because many cities were damaged in World War II, but also because living conditions got low priority under Stalin. Between 1971 and 1975, over 11 million apartments and houses were built in the Soviet Union. This pace is expected to continue in the current five-year plan.

But in the push to provide every family with its own home—a goal yet to be realized—quality and individuality have often suffered. Now there are signs of a reappraisal. Last February, at the Soviet party congress, the party chief, Leonid I. Brezhnev, ordered "designers and builders to improve the layouts of apartments and to build good, high-grade and handsome houses."

ings are joined at angles like open books. Other five-story apartment buildings are staggered in series down the hillsides. Most of the buildings were prefabricated by a local factory. Prefabrication is favored in construction because concrete panels can be erected more quickly. But at Lazdynai, some buildings like schools were built of red brick to impart deliberate animation to the setting.

Landscaping touches included flowerbeds and sculptures like an abstract weathervane and a gaunt man on horseback. These added to the expense, but as one of Lazdynai's designers, Vytautas Cekanaukas, said in an article last May, "Why should a person have to go a hundred kilometers on vacation when he could relax right in his own neighborhood?"

Without any particular architectural heritage to point to, the architects find it hard to explain why Lithuania has led the rest of the Soviet Union in imaginative housing design. Some Lithuanians would say that it is part of a national creativity that becomes even more boldly apparent in the republic's flourishing modern art and sculpture.

Lithuania's architectural eminence was developed through trial and error. When urban planners built the new district of Antakalnis in the early 1960's, they laid the apartment buildings end to end like dominoes along a single main street. This managed to produce what Mr. Balciunas, the architect, called "a kind of wall."

"We wouldn't do it today," he said "but we had problems and we were young."

Attempt to Break the Monotony

In Lithuania, a Baltic republic absorbed by the Soviet Union in 1940, urban planners began trying a decade ago to break away from the monotony that afflicts many Soviet cities. Their efforts are noticeable in a ring of modern suburbs that have been built around this city, known in Lithuanian as Vilnius.

At first sight, the new neighborhoods present a stark contrast with the old city, which dates from the 14th century and retains a sense of history in its graceful medieval churches and narrow cobblestone streets. Mr. Balciunas said the architects tried to carry the quality of discovery over to the newer suburbs. Lazdynai, too, he noted, "is revealed gradually to your eye, you see something and then discover something more."

"If a man finds himself in a new residential area, he must immediately realize where he is," explained Vytautas Balciunas, the quiet-spoken chief architect of the city's Urban Planning Institute. "The houses may be alike but the area must be different."

Lazdynai, about four miles northwest from the city center, won the Lenin Prize in 1973 for architectural innovation. The instant community, which is laid out on wooded rolling hills, reportedly cost over $130 million.

The pine forests have been trimmed back from the side walks and doorways but not cut down to preserve green space around the city.

There are more than 200 buildings in the project. They draw on 15 basic prefabricated models but convey a diversity that is much broader. The tallest buildings, 12 stories high, feature balconies in soothing pastel hues of violet, pumpkin or blue. Some nine-story buildings are joined at angles like open books. Other five-story apartment buildings are staggered in series down the hillsides. Most of the buildings were prefabricated by a local factory. Prefabrication is favored in construction because concrete panels can be erected more quickly. But at Lazdynai, some buildings like schools were built of red brick to impart deliberate animation to the setting.

Landscaping touches included flowerbeds and sculptures like an abstract weathervane and a gaunt man on horseback. These added to the expense, but as one of Lazdynai's designers, Vytautas Cekanaukas, said in an article last May, "Why should a person have to go a hundred kilometers on vacation when he could relax right in his own neighborhood?"

Some Lithuanians would say that it is part of a national creativity that becomes even more boldly apparent in the republic's flourishing modern art and sculpture.

Lithuania's architectural eminence was developed through trial and error. When urban planners built the new district of Antakalnis in the early 1960's, they laid the apartment buildings end to end like dominoes along a single main street. This managed to produce what Mr. Balciunas, the architect, called "a kind of wall."

"We wouldn't do it today," he said "but we had problems and we were young."

More Imagination Used Now

The architects devoted more imagination to laying out Zirmunai, a new district that was awarded a State Prize in 1968. Construction is now under way on two even more modern suburbs.

Lazdynai is still considered the most successful, partly because of its graceful setting. Highway traffic is generally routed in a loop around the development. Pedestrian walkways lead to four neighborhood shopping malls.

So far, there are only two restaurants, one of which includes a saucy midnight cabaret complete with chorus girls. The designers consider these restaurants sufficient, though Mr. Balciunas observed that "we need to construct some cafes with quick service like French bistros, so if you quarrel with your wife, you can go out and have your lunch."

Crumbling doorsteps and peeling facades on a few apartment buildings have already begun to suggest a shoddiness that has been common elsewhere in Soviet construction.

Last spring in the newspaper Pravda, the Lazdynai architect, Mr. Cekanaukas, complained that a new series of housing models designed six years ago was only now becoming available. In projected new suburban districts like Seskine, where construction is to start in 1978, architects plan to avoid traditional matchbox-type construction.

dragged the Jews from the bus, he said, and for what some of the demonstrators estimated was 30 minutes, chased them through the woods, pummeling and kicking them.

Vladimir Slepak, a 49-year-old electrical engineer, said his hands were kicked as he tried to hang onto the bus. "Then I was kicked on the back and the head," he said.

"Don't beat in the face," one of the plainclothesmen instructed the others, according to Mr. Polischuk's account. Nevertheless, Zakhar Tesker's nose was broken. He is a strapping, 30-year-old former army soccer player. He served in a missile unit.

"They were beating very professionally," Mr. Tesker said. "They used very sophisticated tricks, like beating over the neck in such a way as to make the body limp."

Some of the plainclothesmen wore the red armbands of "druzhinniki" or auxiliary police, but the Jews said they were convinced the assailants were policemen or agents of the K.G.B., the security police.

ed back, "Dirty, kikes," the demonstrators said.

At one point, as a young plainclothesman kicked one of the Jews in the groin, Leonid Shabashov, a 30-year-old physical chemist who now teaches mathematics in a high school, said, "You'll go very far, as in the Hitler Youth."

"Yes," the man was quoted as having replied. "I'll go very far."

After the incident, the Jews said they made their way to a station and returned to Moscow by train. Mr. Slepak and the others said they planned to return to the Supreme Soviet offices tomorrow.

United Press International
A worker paints a poster that begins: "Fight to Safeguard..." Presumably, the exhortation is to safeguard Mao's directives, a campaign that has led to the political downfall of Chiang Ching and other radicals.

China's Leftists Are Now Called 'Capitalist-Roaders'

By FOX BUTTERFIELD
Special to The New York Times
HONG KONG, Oct. 19—China's new authorities today stepped up their evidently well-organized campaign against Mao Tse-tung's widow, Chiang Ching, and three other senior leftists with an editorial attacking those who "engage in conspiracies and attempt to usurp party and state power."

The editorial did not identify the four by name, but in the elliptical style of Chinese political debate, it was by far the clearest and most forceful attack yet in the official press.

Miss Chiang and the others, Chiang Chun-chiao, Wang Hung-wen and Yao Wen-yuan, were arrested Oct. 6 or 7 and, according to reports circulating in Peking, were variously charged with distorting Mao's words or plotting to assassinate the new party chairman, Hua Kuo-feng.

The appearance of the editorial, which now becomes the official version of events for Chinese to study, suggests that Mr. Hua and his associates are moving rapidly to justify their actions and preparing to finish off the leftists.

Leftists Lost Strongholds

Over the last few days, the leftists have seemed to lose virtually all their known strongholds—the press, the city of Shanghai, the urban militia force, and Peking and Tsinghua universities in the capital. Today's editorial, published by the party paper, Jenmin Jih Pao, made what analysts here saw as an ingenious move to turn the earlier anti-rightist campaign around against the leftists.

The editorial charged that it was those who engaged in conspiracies and intrigues who were the real "capitalist-roaders in the party." This label was pinned by the leftists earlier this year on Teng Hsiao-ping, a Deputy Prime Minister and leader of the so-called moderates, after he was dismissed from office. It was also a charge leveled against thousands of career party officials in the Cultural Revolution.

The reinterpretation of who the capitalist-roaders are could provide a way to rehabilitate Mr. Teng and others who have not been restored to office since the Cultural Revolution.

Directive to Provinces Hinted

An article in the Hong Kong Communist paper, Wen Hui Pao, suggested today that a directive on this new interpretation might already have been sent out to China's provinces. The paper reported that an army regiment in Canton had come to understand that those people who tamper with Chairman Mao's directives and engage in conspiracies are capitalist-roaders inside the Communist Party.

The article came even closer than the editorial to identify who the conspirators "call themselves 'students of the leader.'" Two days after Mao died, Miss Chiang sent a wreath signed, "Your student and comrade in arms."

The subject matter and style of the Peking editorial seemed to be an ironic jab at the leftists in the subtle style of Chou En-lai, the late Prime Minister, who managed to deflect attacks aimed at himself. It suggested that Chou's successors, perhaps including Mr. Hua, had learned their lessons.

The editorial added that Lu Hsun had of the leftists' own heroes, Lu Hsun, the writer, to criticize the leftists themselves. Recalling that Mao had often urged people to read Lu Hsun's works, the editorial said the writer had "used the sharp scalpel of Marxism on enemies of all descriptions, on 'maggots' that had sneaked into the revolutionary camp, and tore off their masks and exposed their true nature."

The editorial added that Lu Hsun had also attacked "sham Marxist swindlers who pursued their own selfish interests."

India Delays Trial of Socialist

NEW DELHI, Oct. 19 (Reuters)—Proceedings against George Fernandes, the Socialist Party leader, and 31 others were adjourned for a week today after defense lawyers asked for the hearing to be moved to a larger room. The defendants are accused of conspiring to "overawe" the Government by criminal force, of using explosives to sabotage rail and road links and of damaging government buildings.

Label Once Applied to Rightists Is Pinned on Widow of Mao

in the name of revolution" and had "penetratingly exposed those who 'ganged up together and worked hand in glove,' those who hit hard at others to 'show their correctness,' and those who 'speak' high-sounding words in the daytime while playing tricks of creating dissension, instigating and splitting at night."

While the language was arcane, all the references seemed susceptible to the interpretation that they were meant for Miss Chiang and her three fellow leftists, all four still nominally members of the ruling Politburo.

The editorial was timed to honor the 40th anniversary of Lu Hsun's death. In a further irony, analysts noted, Lu Hsun was from Shanghai, the city from which Miss Chiang and the three others rose to power.

The editorial's title sounded an ominous note: "Learn from Lu Hsun, fight on to the end." The phrase "fight to the end" was also used repeatedly in the editorial. There is evidence that the number of those detained in Peking has already spread beyond the original four leaders to officials from the ministries of culture and education, the two universities in Peking and the Chinese press agency, Hsinhua.

But analysts are inclined to believe that Mr. Hua will not push the new campaign into a nationwide purge of leftists. That would be disruptive, compounding the uncertainties of this difficult year. And it might make him appear no better than the intriguers and conspirators he was trying to discredit.

Mr. Kissinger Defends Position of U.S. on Human Rights

State Henry A. Kissinger ended the Ford Administration human rights and said Congress to use legislation in other countries were too inflexible, too public-handed" to achieve results.

But he pledged that whatever the differences, "this Administration remains dedicated to the objective" and would spare "no effort to increase the flow of emigrants once again."

Soon after Mr. Kissinger began his speech, a group in the rear chanted: "Israel must live, Kissinger must go. No Israeli retreats. No arms to Arab murderers." The group later identified as Save Our Israel, was forcibly removed.

After the interruption, Mr. Kissinger said in response to comments by the chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, Gen. George S. Brown, that Israel was a burden on the United States:

"In our joint efforts we consider Israel not as a burden but a strong asset, not as a liability but as a staunch bastion of democracy."

Mr. Kissinger said the most striking example was the Jewish emigration from the Soviet Union where before any law was passed, "hundreds of hardship cases" were taken care of quietly, but when the law was passed, total emigration dropped significantly.

But he pledged that whatever the differences, "this Administration remains dedicated to the objective" and would spare "no effort to increase the flow of emigrants once again."

2 Nations Report Anti-Castro Exiles Have Plotted Many Terrorist Acts

By DAVID BINDER
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Oct. 19—Venezuelan and United States authorities reported today that a group of anti-Castro Cuban exiles had recently plotted a "vast" number of terrorist actions in the hemisphere, using connections with top-ranking Venezuelan Government figures to protect themselves.

The Venezuelan authorities said the "terrorist actions" planned by the Cuban exiles were aimed at diplomatic and commercial installations of the Government of Prime Minister Fidel Castro in seven countries and against countries and individuals friendly to Cuba.

They said seven Cuban exiles and seven Venezuelans were under arrest in Caracas and that 30 more Cuban exiles were being interrogated in the Venezuelan capital in connection with a bomb blast that destroyed a Cuban airliner Oct. 6.

In addition, authorities of both countries said in telephone interviews that the Cuban exile group was also responsible for plotting the bomb slaying Sept. 21 of Orlando Letelier, former Foreign Minister of Chile, in Washington, D.C.

Venezuelan and Cuban authorities also said two of the Cuban exiles under arrest in connection with the bomb plots had formerly worked for and been trained by the United States Central Intelligence Agency.

Once Worked for Secret Police
A Venezuelan official, who declined to be identified, said Luis Posada Carriles, a Cuban who was formerly operations chief of the Venezuelan secret police, had been given "technical training by the C.I.A."

Zenen Buargo, first secretary of the Cuban Mission to the United Nations, said today in an interview that the other exile, Herman Ricardo Losano, who is under arrest in Trinidad, had been trained in the 1960's by the C.I.A. in bomb-making. Mr. Ricardo Losano, an employee of a Caracas detective agency run by Mr.

Posada, today told Trinidad's Assistant Police Chief, Dennis Ramdaward, that he had planted two bombs on a Cuban airliner that crashed Oct. 6 near Barbados, killing all 73 aboard, according to wire service dispatches from Port of Spain.

Venezuelan authorities said a police raid on Mr. Posada's fortified residence in eastern Caracas last week had turned up "equipment and plans," including a map of Washington, D.C., related to the bomb attack on the Cuban airliner and to the slaying of Mr. Letelier.

The Venezuelan security police said the raid also turned up plans for terrorist actions by Cuban exiles in the United States, Venezuela, Trinidad, Barbados, Guyana, Panama and Colombia.

The Venezuelan police subsequently arrested Mr. Posada and Orlando Bosch, 49 years old, a Cuban exile and the reputed leader of the exile groups opposed to the Castro Government.

Contact With Another Exile
Caracas authorities said today in telephone interviews that Mr. Bosch had arrived in Venezuela Sept. 23 from Nicaragua with a forged Costa Rican passport.

Mr. Bosch had been convicted of a bazooka attack on a Polish ship in Miami in 1962 and subsequently served four years of a 10-year term, after which he was paroled.

Venezuelan and American authorities reported that he was met at the Caracas airport last month by Mr. Posada and Orlando Garcia, another Cuban exile who had become a naturalized Venezuelan and was a special adviser on security affairs to President Carlos Andres Perez.

Venezuelan and American officials reported that Mr. Garcia once arranged a meeting between Mr. Bosch and President Perez. They said Mr. Garcia was among the 14 arrested Friday, along with Francisco Nmez, another Cuban exile who had been an officer in the Venezuelan secret police.

Lebanese Fight On as Truce Nears; Beirut Leaders Acclaim Agreement

however, is not expected to be overly strict.

In addition, Yasser Arafat, the head of the Palestine Liberation Organization, appears to have saved the Palestinian leadership from a Syrian-imposed shakeup but little more.

Lebanon's President, Elias Sarkis, returned from Riyadh today to face the task of persuading Lebanese right-wing Christian leaders to accept the Arab peace plan, which he and Mr. Arafat signed along with Presidents Assad and Anwar el-Sadat of Egypt, King Khalid of Saudi Arabia and the ruler of Kuwait, Sheik Sabah al-Sabah.

Meanwhile, members of the opposing side in the Lebanese civil war, the Lebanese alliance of Moslems and leftists, who have been afraid of a reconciliation between their Palestinian allies and Syria, are waiting for an explanation of the Riyadh accord from Mr. Arafat.

The agreement deals exclusively with the Syrian-Palestinian conflict and with the military aspects of the war, but makes no reference to the political and religious differences between the opposing Lebanese factions.

This, it is understood, was done deliberately at the request of Mr. Sarkis. The new Lebanese President has consistently taken the position that if the Palestinian aspect of the war is settled by the leaders of the Arab world, he will be able to begin the search for a solution to Lebanon's domestic problems.

The Riyadh accord also specifies that President Sarkis is to have control over the Arab peacekeeping force, which is to be increased to 30,000 men from the present 2,500.

Mr. Sarkis thus is considered by many here as a winner in Riyadh. They note that he is now emerging as President after a long and humiliating wait.

Mr. Sarkis was elected by Lebanon's Parliament on May 8 under Syrian protection. He remained silent and with few contacts until Sept. 23, when he was sworn in after the term of his predecessor, Suleiman Franjeh, expired.

Five days after his inauguration, Syrian troops launched their offensive against Palestinian forces in the mountains east of Beirut. So Mr. Sarkis remained silent until he went to Riyadh.

"Now for the first time he has responsibilities and a chance to prove himself," a Lebanese editor said tonight.

As seen from the war-scarred city of Beirut the Riyadh agreement raises many questions, the most immediate of which involves the timetable for withdrawal. The accord stipulates that the main highways in the country, including the Beirut-Damascus road must be reopened in five days and that in seven days armed men and heavy weapons must be withdrawn from the front lines in Beirut.

But the agreement also states that the 27,500 new troops of the Arab peacekeeping force are to arrive after two weeks. On the basis of past performance, it appears likely that they will be deployed much later.

Does this mean that Syrian troops will move between the opposing militia groups in downtown Beirut? Many politicians and Lebanese journalists today asked. If so, many here believe, there will be fighting between the Syrians and the more radical Palestinian groups.

The Syrians have about 22,000 men in Lebanon now, and, according to reports here today, most of them will remain in the country as part of the enlarged Arab peacekeeping force. The Riyadh statement, it is noted, said nothing about a Syrian withdrawal.

While Syria's President is believed to have received a mandate for continued intervention in Lebanon it is noted that Syria broke off its military action against the Palestinians and did not push through to the outskirts of Beirut and Saida.

The pressure that Saudi Arabia exerted on Syria is believed here to have been very strong. There have been reports that King Khalid threatened to cut off oil shipments to Syria and to cancel $300 million worth of economic development projects.

Syria also had to abandon its demand for a change in the leadership of the Palestine Liberation Organization as Mr. Arafat received support as P.L.O. leader in Riyadh. The Palestinian leadership under Arafat thus continues, though militarily weakened.

New Accord on Lebanon Illustrates Expanding Power of Saudi Arabia

By ERIC PACE
Special to The New York Times

BAGHDAD, Iraq, Oct. 19—A flurry of public smiles, a spate of private jawboning, a few announcements: physically, the meeting of a handful of Arab leaders in the remote Saudi Arabian capital, Riyadh, was modest compared to larger conclaves of Arab kings and presidents in past years at worldier cities. But when the Riyadh gathering ended last night, its austere proceedings had richly demonstrated how vast an influence Saudi Arabia has come to wield in inter-Arab affairs—an influence that stems from a mixture of Saudi oil, aid, prudence and ambition—combined with a propitious set of circumstances elsewhere in the Arab world.

These ingredients made it possible last week for Saudi Arabia to accomplish something that no other country could do: to get the presidents of Egypt, Syria and Lebanon and the head of the Palestine Liberation Organization to gather in the same city at the same time, along with Saudi and Kuwaiti potentates.

The results may prove ephemeral in the quicksilver world of Middle East politics, but for the moment, many Arabs view them as monumental: a re-establishment of relations between the feuding leaderships of Egypt and Syria, and agreement on a peace plan for Lebanon that included strengthening the inter-Arab peace force there.

Victory for Saudi Diplomacy
Appraisals differ as to what specific role Saudi Arabia played in the detailed negotiations at Riyadh. In the Saudi capital the Egyptian-Syrian thaw is now seen as a victory of Saudi diplomacy. And in informed quarters in this neighboring Arab capital, it is said that great Saudi pressure was exerted on all parties toward securing an end to the violence in Lebanon as well as getting Egypt and Syria to make up.

Even radical Iraqis, who are no great admirers of Saudi Arabia's conservative monarch, King Khalid, and its strong man, Crown Prince Fahd, acknowledge that the Saudi kingdom is in a key position now by virtue of its conflicts.

"The Saudis' hands are dripping with oil, and they are not dripping with blood," an Iraqi intellectual observed, comparing the Saudi regime favorably with the rulers of Syria. Iraq's unfriendly neighbor, who are accused here of massacring Palestinians in Lebanon.

In point of fact, there is plenty of Saudi oil to drip: the Saudi Kingdom is the world's largest oil exporter with by far the world's largest proven oil reserves, totaling well over 150 billion barrels. The kingdom is also thought to have the greatest unexplored oil potential of any nation.

The swift increase in oil prices that began late in 1973 has made Saudi Arabia something of a world power; if it wanted, it could destroy the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries by flooding the world market with Saudi oil.

The Saudis' stature in world energy affairs contributes to their standing within the Arab world, but by far the largest ingredient in their inter-Arab influence is their vast oil wells: the kingdom's monetary reserves totalled about $25 billion this spring, after an increase of almost $2 billion within a three-month period. Earlier this year there were predictions that the Saudi oil revenues would exceed $30 billion in 1976, far more than the Government is able to spend internally.

Accordingly, Saudi Arabia is in a position to extend large amounts of aid to governments it favors. Its aid in 1974 and 1975 totalled more than $1.7 billion. It gave extensive aid to Syria and Egypt, both of which are in need of further assistance.

Overpopulated and deeply in debt to the Soviet Union, Egypt has severe economic problems that it hopes to offset with development plans financed largely by outside aid.

Syria is relatively better off than Egypt, but its economy has been jolted by the fighting in Lebanon: through the influx of Lebanese refugees into Syria, and through the cost of maintaining the Syrian army contingents in Lebanon, which is now more than 20,000 strong.

This combination of factors gave the Saudis considerable leverage over the Syrian and Egyptian Governments. And the Saudis are applying this pressure in an effort to end the Damascus-Cairo quarrel, which was exacerbated by Syrian denunciation of Cairo's acceptance last year of the Sinai accord with Israel.

The view in Riyadh is that the quarrel and the civil war in Lebanon have weakened the Arab camp and diverted energies that should have been used to confront Israel.

Doctors' Strike Just One of Crises Facing Colombian Ch...

By JUAN DE ONIS
Special to The New York Times

BOGOTA, Colombia, Oct. 18—President Alfonso López Michelsen of Colombia is facing a combination of problems that would be called a national crisis in most countries, but are regarded here as the habitual level of conflict and insecurity.

A strike by 4,500 physicians of the socialized medical system has paralyzed for six weeks the free health care to which 1,400,000 social security contributors and their families are entitled. In the emergency, the military hospital here has become Colombia's principal maternity center, with 1,500 babies delivered in the last month.

Troops occupied the campus of the National University at the weekend after extremists burned automobiles and assaulted tradesmen making deliveries to the student restaurant. The security services said gasoline bombs and documents of a left-wing guerrilla organization had been found in the dormitories.

At least four Cabinet ministers have submitted their resignations, including the two principal representatives of the Conservative Party in Colombia's coalition government. The country's powerful business organizations are calling for the resignation as well of Minister of Finance Rodrigo Botero, whom they blame for rising taxes.

The Rich Hire Bodyguards

There were the customary news items that some wealthy merchant or rancher had been kidnapped, or released for ransom, by gangs that make a business of extortion.

Nearly everyone in this large, untamed country of 24 million people who thinks he is rich enough to be kidnapped travels with a bodyguard. A Toyota dealer who sells many jeeps to ranchers said that his customers often ask for gun racks as an accessory.

There were the usual reports of clashes in remote rural areas between army patrols and small bands of Marxist guerrillas, or simply bandits, hired by the urban revolutionaries with proceeds from kidnappings or bank robberies.

Another war is on between the national police and the big smugglers who ship cocaine and marijuana by the ton to the United States and Europe and introduce huge shipments of contraband here, such as cigarettes and transistor radios, which are sold freely by peddlers on the streets of this capital.

Roberto Gerlein Echeverri, vice president of the Senate, said in an interview that Colombia, and particularly the smuggling centers on the Atlantic coast, such as Barranquilla, were living in the state of corruption reached in Cuba under the dictatorship of Fulgencio Batista when it was a center of gambling, prostitution and drug traffic.

Senator Gerlein, a Conservative, attributes Colombia's insecurity to a breakdown in social solidarity. Others who have expressed similar views include Archbishop José de Jesús Pinzanteo and Manuel Zapata, president of the National Conference of Bishops, and Fabio Echeverri Correa, president of the National Association of Industries.

But businessmen and the conservative...

A police jeep was set on fire by leftist students at the National University in Bogotá, Colombia, during a demonstration earlier this year. Last weekend, army troops occupied the campus when similar disturbances broke out.

lently opposed to a social-minded tax imposed by President López Michelsen in fulfillment of his Liberal Party program to close the gap between the few rich and the many poor.

Business leaders say that the tax levels, which go as high as 70 percent for those with incomes over $30,000 a year, are unbearable, and they maintain that revenues are being used to pay for a bloated, inefficient bureaucracy to satisfy political ends.

There are symptoms of a tax rebellion by the middle class and small businessmen. Revenues for the year are below projections and the federal budget, which was supposed to be balanced, is likely to show a $60 million deficit.

More serious than this is unemployment. A study indicated that in Colombia's four major cities—Bogotá, Cali, Medellín, and Barranquilla—12 percent of the labor force could not find jobs, compared with 11 percent in May.

Prices Are Rising Sharply

The minimum wage was increased earlier by 20 percent to offset inflationary price increases, but with food costs rising sharply, the Government's goal of holding living costs to a maximum of 15 percent has already been overtaken. Consumer prices are now expected to rise 25 percent by year's end.

The resentment of workers, many of whom earn the basic daily wage of $2, is aggravated by the knowledge that Colombia's main export product, coffee, is selling for record prices and that the Bank of the Republic has accumulated $500 million in reserves.

Te Government, obsessed with preventing further inflation, has cut back on public investment and is paying coffee producers only 50 percent of the international price. With plenty of dollars to pay for imports, the Government has reduced duties, partly to reduce prices.

But the result has been to amply the coffee growers, discourage private contractors, and arouse the ire of industrialists, who fear competition from imported goods.

President López Michelsen, who was elected with 3,000,000 votes in 1974, is now into the second half of his term, and cannot be re-elected in 1978. He is an unusual political figure. The son of a former Liberal president, Alfonso López Pumarejo, he is more an aristocrat than a populist leader. Educated in English schools, he became a Social Democrat after an early fling at more radical theories of social change.

During most of last week he played the host to King Juan Carlos and Queen Sofia of Spain. Between the ceremonies and banquets attending the visit, which delighted Colombia's upper classes, the President found time to address himself to the domestic anxieties.

In a letter accepting the resignation of his favorite member of the Cabinet, Minister of Labor María Elena de Crovo, a victim of the doctors' strike, the President called on the Liberal Party to stand firm against the dangers of populism in a liberal democracy. # AGON IS ACCUSED ANTI-ISRAEL STAND

Mideast Intelligence Criticizes Gen. Brown

By Bernard Gwertzman

WASHINGTON, Oct. 19 — The Air Force's senior intelligence official for the Middle East, Joseph Churba, the Air Force's senior intelligence official for the Middle East, said that the remarks made by the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff—and subsequently modified by him—would contribute further to a "rising tide of criticism" he said he has detected within the Pentagon to denigrate the importance of Israel's ties to the United States.

of a growing "tilt against Israel in the Defense Department."
Joseph Churba, the Air Force's senior intelligence official for the Middle East, said that the remarks made by the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff—and subsequently modified by him—would contribute further to a "rising tide of criticism" he said he has detected within the Pentagon to denigrate the importance of Israel's ties to the United States.

It is an issue that has concerned the 43-year-old analyst for some months. It led him to make the unusually blunt criticism of the top service officer in a series of telephone conversations with The New York Times from a hospital bed where he is being treated for back trouble.

Mr. Churba, an outspoken New Yorker, has the formal title of special adviser, Office of the Assistant Chief of Staff, Intelligence, United States Air Force headquarters. He has a bachelor's degree from Brooklyn College and an M.A. and Ph.D. from Columbia University. He speaks Arabic, Hebrew and French and has written many articles, principally in military journals.

He said that he was Jewish, from a religious background, and had been ordained, but never practiced as a rabbi. Mr. Churba denied that this biased his view in support of Israel. He said his background was well-known to the Air Force and that it was "a credit to them" that he was given the sensitive job in the Washington intelligence community.

"I have never detected any anti-Semitism in the Air Force," he said. Mr. Churba said General Brown's comments that were made public recently, as well as his earlier remarks complaining about Jewish influence in Washington, had permeated the thinking of others in the Pentagon.

He said that reports were tailored in the services and in the intelligence community to conform with a view that Israel had sufficient military equipment to defend itself, that Israel was an "orphan child" adopted by the United States but that "the real game is elsewhere with the Arabs and Iranians."

To underscore his concern, he said that an unclassified article he had written, based on his past year's study at the National War College, expounding the view that relations with Israel were in the strategic interest of the United States, had been blocked from publication.

He said "it was held up only for political reasons" because his views advocating close ties with Israel and coolness to Arabs differed in some respects from the Administration's.

In an April interview, General Brown was asked by an Israeli cartoonist, Ranan

R. Lurie, whether he regarded Israel as more a military burden or a blessing. The general said, "Well, I think it's just got to be considered a burden."

He said that he had disagreed with Senator Jacob K. Javits, Republican of New York, who had stressed the strategic importance of Israel.

Mr. Churba said that "General Brown's comment was dangerously irresponsible because it is precisely what the Soviets and Arabs are telling the United States."

He said the Arab countries had succeeded that it was in American interest to "unload the burden" of Israel and tighten relations with them. The Russians, he said, also have been trying to convince Americans not to let relations with Israel hold up an accord.

Mr. Churba was reached by The Times after it received a copy of his latest article. "What are America's Fundamental National Interests in the Middle East?"

and was told that he had been unable to have it approved for publication. He confirmed that and said the piece was written on the basis of a longer work done while he attended the National War College at Fort McNair, Washington, D.C., and was not based on any classified material.

He said he shortened it and submitted it routinely for publication in June, and never received approval. Mr. Churba said that regulations required that he be given specific reasons for a formal denial and he theorized that the Pentagon did not want to do that, and therefore was just holding it up. Normally, he said, approval is given in four weeks.

The Defense Department was asked this morning for comment on Mr. Churba's complaint but no response as received by the end of the day.

High Official's Arrest Shakes Israel

By WILLIAM E. FARRELL
Special to The New York Times

JERUSALEM, Oct. 16—The arrest of Asher Yadin, a high Israeli official, on suspicion of bribery and fraud, has embarrassed and shaken Israel's ruling Labor Party and has led to speculation that the scandal could widen to include illegal campaign contributions.

Mr. Yadin was nominated last month by Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin and members of his Cabinet to assume the prestigious post of governor of the Bank of Israel. Mr. Yadin and several associates were remanded to jail today by a Tel Aviv judge for 15 days while a police investigation into allegations against them continued.

The Yadin affair, as it is being called here, has caused a furor in the press—particularly since the post he is being recommended for is a major economic one, roughly analogous to that of the chairman of the Federal Reserve Board in Washington.

The charges of accepting bribes and real estate fraud stem from Mr. Yadin's current post as head of the Kupat Holim, Israel's vast worker sick fund. The Kupat Holim is an arm of the Histadrut, the country's general labor federation.

The Histadrut is the most important economic body in the state, with a membership of about 1.3 million in a nation of 3.5 million citizens. Histadrut leaders are also major figures in the Labor Party.

The allegations against Mr. Yadin, who refused to ask that his nomination for the bank job be withdrawn, arose a few days after the Rabin Government nominated him. Since then, a major police investigation into Mr. Yadin's dealings has been begun, to the chagrin of a number of Labor Party officials.

"Searching for a quality Nursing Home
Come to Washington, D.C.
You Could Save Over $100 Every Week"

Capt. L. D. Lamade, U.S.N. Retired
Director, External Affairs, Wisconsin Avenue Nursing Home

The Wisconsin Avenue Nursing Home is one of Washington, D.C.'s most highly respected nursing homes. It is completely modern—built in 1974—and located in a beautiful residential neighborhood just three blocks from the famous Washington Cathedral.

Yet, it can cost as much as $100 less per week than luxury nursing homes of comparable quality in the New York City area.

Why? Simply because everything... staff, supplies, real estate taxes, utilities... costs far less in Washington, D.C.

Why travel all the way to Washington, D.C.?

Three fundamental reasons:

- $100 a week is an extraordinary saving for any family. And it is far more than the round trip air fare between New York and Washington, D.C.
- Many of the New York City area's best nursing homes—especially those located in reputable neighborhoods—have long waiting lists.
- Genuine concern and highly professional nursing home care are hard to find—anywhere at any price. It is crucial that an elderly member of your family receive the best possible care. And it is constantly reassuring to know that he or she is getting it.

Professional 24-hour Nursing Care
The Wisconsin Avenue Nursing Home is fully staffed by professional nurses 24 hours a day... women and men who are chosen not only for their skill, but also for their kindness, sensitivity and dedication.

Here's the new at-home wear.
At home in the Empire Room,
the Rainbow Room and your living room.

Used to be (you may be too young to remember) when you wouldn't go out without little white gloves, and you were an "old maid" if you were single at 32. That was when at-home wear was a baby blue wrap-me-up with matching scuffs, such a home-body it hardly ventured beyond the bedroom door.

But now you're a home-body anywhere you're having fun. Now you need "at-home" clothes that know how to relax wherever the action is.

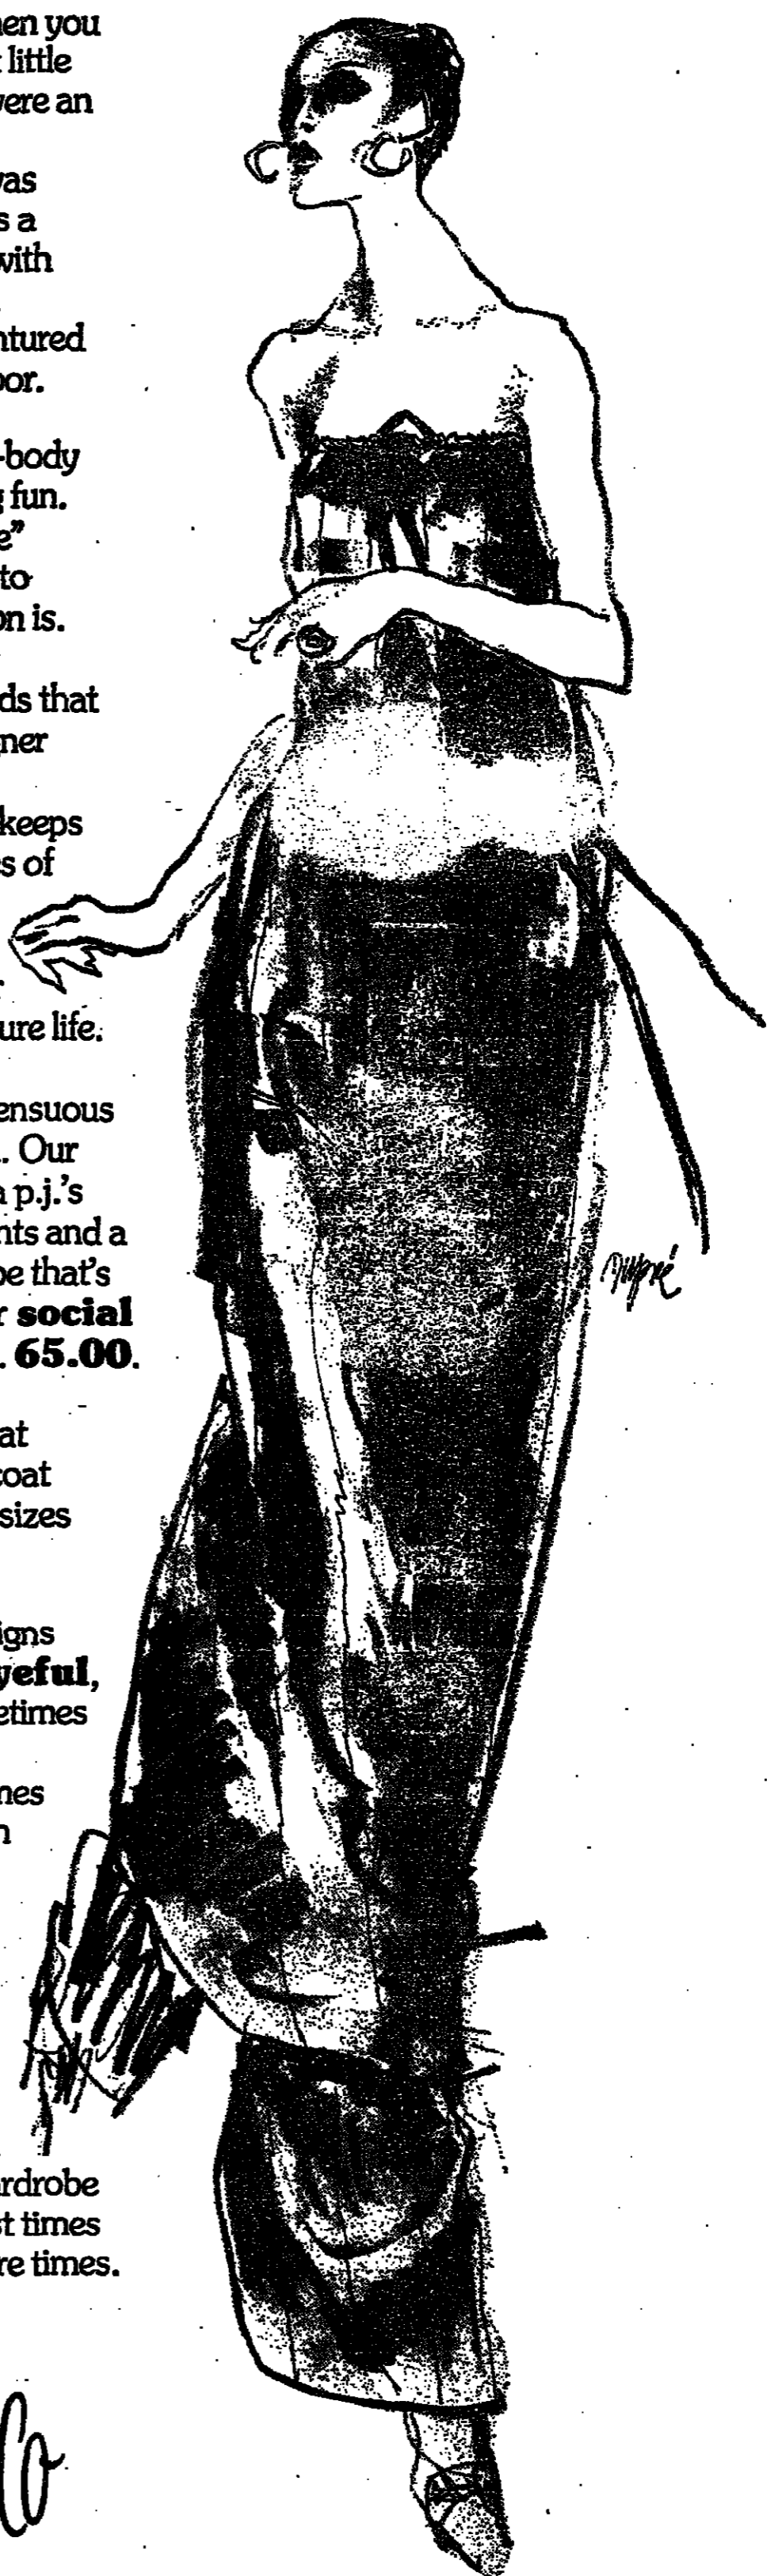

And nobody understands that better than young designer Ronald Kolodzie. (No wonder his picture keeps popping up on the pages of Women's Wear Daily.) Kolodzie has created new kinds of clothes for your all-kinds of leisure life.

Like these shimmery, sensuous slinks of black satin. Our acetate and nylon Plaza p.j.'s include elastic waist pants and a long, strapless tunic-tube that's elasticized at the top for social security. In p.s.m. and l. 65.00.

And the button front that doubles as an evening coat (also in black satin) fits sizes p. to l. at 55.00.

But Ronald, whose designs wear a label you like, Eyeful, doesn't forget that sometimes you want to relax in feathery fleece, sometimes you want to breakfast in slick stripes, and so on.

That's why, when you come to meet designer Ronald Kolodzie today from 12:30 till 2, you'll see informal modeling of a whole wardrobe of new ideas for the best times of your life, your leisure times.

U. N. ARMS EMBARGO ON PRETORIA VETOED

in the Council hall from time to time. The defeated resolution would have obligated governments of nations belonging to the United Nations to prohibit the transfer to South Africa of arms, ammunition, aircraft, vehicles or other equipment for military use, as well as spare parts and any information relating to such supplies.

The triple veto was denounced by Salim A. Salim of Tanzania, who charged that the Western powers had shown insensitivity to the Africans' sentiments, given comfort to the South African Government and enabled the Pretoria authorities to continue repressive policies. "They have laid the grounds for more bloodshed in Namibia and in Southern Africa," he said.

U.S. Emphasizes Voluntary Action

Both Britain and the United States emphasized in the Council discussion that they were voluntarily enforcing a ban on the sending of arms to South Africa. France, which has been under attack for providing South Africa with facilities for development of nuclear energy, said it was tightening its trade restrictions.

Mr. Scranton also argued that approval by the Council of resolutions advocating drastic measures would not promote independence for Namibia and might have the opposite effect by upsetting Secretary Kissinger's delicate mission.

Both in the Council today and even more openly in private, delegates of African countries and some others have expressed skepticism that Mr. Kissinger has been able to win concessions from Mr. Vorster, particularly on two key points—willingness to negotiate with the South-West African People's Organization, which is recognized by the United Nations as the "authentic" representative of the 900,000 people of Namibia, and willingness to participate in a conference held under United Nations auspices.

The representatives of Panama, Tanzania, Pakistan and other sponsors of the resolution said that their doubts had been reinforced by the interview with Prime Minister Vorster published today in The

New York Times in which he declared that he "had nothing to say to SWAPO at all." Mr. Vorster was also quoted as having said that the Pretoria Government might send an observer but not a delegation to the conference on Namibia that Mr. Kissinger seeks to arrange.

The SWAPO representative, Theo-Ben Gurirab, who spoke in the Council tonight after the vote, said he was not surprised by the triple veto, which he charged had clearly been agreed upon in advance by the Western powers and the "racist Vorster regime."

He quoted Mr. Vorster as having said in the interview in The Times that he saw no chance of the Council's approving an embargo resolution, and added: "There is clear duplicity here despite all the false promises and unfounded claims about progress concerning Namibia."

Administration Blocks Move by H.E.W. Officials to Take Racial Census of 16,000 Public School Systems

ERNEST HOLSENDOERF
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Oct. 19—The Administration blocked a move by the Department of Health, Education and Welfare to take a census of 16,000 of the nation's school systems to determine the distribution of schools by race, sex and other factors.

The census, which is mandated by the Civil Rights Act of 1964 and other education laws, is considered by officials to be vital in assessing the progress of school integration programs under the Civil Rights Act. Legislation does not require a census every year, but civil rights law that the implication is strong law requires regular gathering of information, such as an enrollment census, that would aid enforcement of the law.

Until 1974, the survey was made annually, but it was not done in 1975, in part because legislation required changes in the survey forms, which were delayed. Civil rights advocates have charged that the lack of a 1975 survey resulted from a political decision.

In a letter to the Office of Civil Rights dated Oct. 5, Royce L. Lowry, a clearance officer for the Office of Management and Budget, said that cooperation with the proposed survey would impose an "excessive burden" on local school officials.

The letter said that the enforcement arm of H.E.W. had already taken on more reviews of local civil rights compliance than it could handle.

"Given this backlog, it would be inappropriate to conduct a comprehensive compliance survey during this school year," Mr. Lowry wrote to Paul Kretzmer of the civil rights office.

Given the long time it takes to process the data from a survey, education specialists say, information collected this fall would not be available until the winter of 1977.

The census is "one of the basic tools used in civil rights enforcement," said William L. Taylor, director of the Center for National Policy Review.

Civil rights groups reacted strongly to the decision to hold up the survey. Some of them suggested that Presidential election politics might be behind the move.

Marian Wright Edelman, director of the Children's Defense Fund here, in a telegram to the White House called the move by the Office of Management and Budget "an outrage."

"The decision to scuttle the civil rights survey at this time can only be seen as one more piece of evidence of the insensitivity of your Administration to all minority groups in this country and a lack of commitment to enforcing the law on their behalf," she said.

Fernando Oaxaco, associate director of manpower at the budget office, met today with civil rights representatives and H.E.W. officials.

"We did imply earlier that unless changes were made we would not approve a survey this year," Mr. Oaxaco said. "Mainly, it was a matter of timing. We didn't get the request for a survey until Sept. 16, and we had problems with the fact that it asked for retroactive information on discipline that we thought might not be readily available on the local level."

He added: "Personally, I'm in favor of a survey. I hope something can be worked out in the next few days."

In recent months, there have been scattered reports that many school systems that were previously desegregated have become resegregated. There have also been charges of discriminatory treatment of blacks and other minorities in desegregated schools that contributed to unusually high dropout rates among minority youngsters.

"Statistics, of course, never prove discrimination alone," said Ann Rosewater, an education specialist with the Children's Defense Fund. "But this kind of survey could serve to flag the districts where further investigation would be warranted."

Attending the meeting with Federal officials today were representatives of the Center for National Policy Review, the Children's Defense Fund, the American Friends Service Committee, the Lawyers Committee for Civil Rights and the NAACP Legal Defense and Educational Fund Inc.

The Limits of Beame's Authority Move for a Hospital Affiliation in the Bronx Brings Religious Charge

Mayor's Effort to Oust Holloman Reopens Issue Of His Lack of Control of Semi-Independent Units

By STEVEN R. WEISMAN

With the disclosure that Mayor Beame is actively seeking the ouster of Dr. John S. Holloman as president of New York City's Health and Hospitals Corporation, the already tense relations between City Hall and the city's big independent agencies come under fresh strains. For Mr. Beame, a move to exercise control over management of the sprawling municipal hospital system marks a major shift of policy. At the same time, it is not entirely clear what the Mayor's legal authority is in this area.

For 18 months Mr. Beame has made no secret of his displeasure of having to deal with the city's independent agencies—particularly the Boards of Education and Higher Education, the Transit Authority and the Health and Hospitals Corporation—and he has more than once called on the Legislature to give him greater statutory authority over their affairs.

The City Hall argument has long been that the subsidies granted directly to the schools and colleges, as well as to the municipal hospitals and the transit system, ought to require tight mayoral control over their spending, especially since the Mayor is the one who must take the blame if the city slips in its rigid three-year timetable to balance its budget as required by state and Federal law.

Insists He Is Powerless
All the time that he has asked for greater powers over the independent agencies, Mr. Beame has insisted that he is powerless to intervene unilaterally. But there is another view of Mr. Beame's behavior that explains, for some, the latest turn of events. This view was expressed in a sometimes tense, argumentative tone at a meeting last Friday of the Emergency Financial Control Board, the state panel headed by Governor Carey that oversees the city's fiscal affairs.

A "consensus" was reached among the Control Board's seven members, participants said afterward, that Dr. Holloman and the high-level management at the Health and Hospitals Corporation were a "disaster" and that Mayor Beame could do something about it even under present circumstances.

Fear of Growing Deficit
The board members were responding out of fear that the city's strained finances could be completely undermined if the hospital system ran up the nearly $50 million of deficit now projected for this year, not to mention the $100 million in deficit projected for next year. The board members were vexed that Dr. Holloman had, after months, come up with what they felt were vague, unspecified proposals that they feared would not lead to a balanced budget. "We know the Hospitals Corporation is a massive disaster," one Control Board member said afterward. "The Mayor sat there telling us that there was little he could do. We reached the point where we had to pull out the little book and look at the corporation's structure. The feeling was that if the Mayor wanted to change the management, he ought to be able to find the way."

The Corporation's Makeup
It was not until after the meeting that mayoral aides—chagrined, perhaps, at being accused of evading the hospitals problem—let it be known that they had in fact started to look for a replacement for Dr. Holloman.

The hospitals corporation consists of 16 members. Five are ex-officio members of the Beame administration, including the city's Health Services Administrator, who serves as corporation chairman. Five more are appointed to terms of office by the Mayor, and another five by the Mayor on the recommendation of the City Council. These directors in turn choose the corporation's president, who becomes the 16th board member.

Although Mayor Beame has had the opportunity to put a couple of his own appointees on the board—he chose Melvin N. Lecher, his former Budget Director, to fill one recent vacancy—many officials agree that the Mayor can always demand that the board members follow his directives. In fact, one official at the Health and Hospitals Corporation criticized Mr. Beame for not exercising that option.

"I don't think City Hall has really wanted more control," the official said in an interview. "Up to now they've had the best of both worlds. We've had to close the hospitals and lay off workers and take the heat, and the Mayor has escaped all that."

"In fact, City Hall has always had considerable control over our functions. But we're faced now with an incredible number of intractable problems, all of which they've run away from. We're the weakest part of the whole system, we're the most vulnerable, and we become the scapegoat. Now it's time for the Mayor to take on the issues, even though it won't get any easier."

served by the new Lincoln Hospital "would much rather be treated by their own people"—that is, by a hospital that had an affiliation with a Roman Catholic hospital—rather than by one identified with Jewish support.
The emotional dispute is largely an outgrowth of another hospital battle in the Bronx, in which the city's Health and Hospitals Corporation chose Montefiore Hospital and Medical Center, another institution with Jewish support, rather than Misericordia to provide doctors and other health professionals to run the new $100 million North Central Bronx Hospital. Montefiore had asked $15 million a year in its affiliation proposal.
Monsignor Cassidy warned that if Misericordia was denied a major affiliation contract to replace the minor one it now had at Lincoln, the Beame administration would risk the opposition of Catholic voters in the Bronx.
In response, Dr. Ephraim Friedman, dean of Albert Einstein, said that the city's effort to force his college out of Lincoln in favor of Misericordia "had unleashed an ethnic and religious conflict that had not existed before."
Dean Friedman said that any move to oust his institution was a "blatant political act" to appease Catholic constituencies.
"But this one smells so bad that the bad stench from it will put a stop to it," he said.

Although he said the city had the legal authority to cancel its affiliation contract with the college, after giving three months' notice, he contended that the college had "no intention of giving up its affiliation without a fight."
According to Dr. John L. S. Holloman, the president of the New York City Health and Hospitals Corporation, the dispute between Einstein and Misericordia represents a "very real struggle" between the archdiocese and Jewish medical philanthropy for "the health-care dollar in this city."
"And it is a struggle waged without any regard for the health care of the poor people involved," Dr. Holloman said.

Consolation Prize
"It is high time that the most powerful religious groups stop battling each other and start giving some concern to the millions of poor persons in the Bronx," he said.
According to various city health and hospital officials, the sharp conflict between the contending medical forces resulted in part from Misericordia's failure to win an affiliation contract at the North Central Bronx Hospital.
The Health and Hospitals Corporation awarded the North Central Bronx affiliation contract to Montefiore, where Einstein has some of its teaching facilities. As viewed by various city and state officials, Misericordia's displacement of Einstein at Lincoln Hospital Hospital could be the consolation prize for losing out to Montefiore and Einstein at North Central.

Toward that end, members of the hospital agency said privately that Mayor Beame, through his first Deputy, John E. Zuccotti, exerted intense pressure upon Dr. Holloman to arrange a new affiliation contract at Lincoln that would see Einstein essentially replaced by Misericordia.
The corporation's board members discussed the proposed switch on Monday and also took up a letter from Dr. Holloman to Monsignor Cassidy in which he said that any change in the contract would have to be approved by the board.
According to one board member, Deputy Mayor Paul Gibson Jr., Mr. Beame's personal representative on the board, said, "we don't want to have a Catholic-Jewish fight over this thing."

According to city and state officials, the political effort to award Misericordia a major municipal hospital affiliation began last summer when the city's Morrisania and Fordham Hospital Bronx was abolished. Misericordia's medical affiliation at Fordham has been demanding ever since the given a new affiliation.
Council's First Act: Cut Sal
NORTH LAS VEGAS, Nev., (UPI)—The newly constituted city council met for the first time last night in the first thing members did was cut own salaries. In an effort to save they cut the salary of Mayor Ra from $15,000 to $10,000 and the of Councilwoman Cynthia Baumman Brown from $10,000 to $6,000. Council replaces one that was due a recall election.

Imperato Named to Succeed Bellin

Mayor Beame announced the appointment of Dr. Pascal James Imperato yesterday as New York City's Commissioner of Health effective Jan. 1. Whether Dr. Imperato will also succeed the current Health Commissioner, Dr. Lowell E. Bellin, as chairman of the board of the troubled Health and Hospitals Corporation is still a question.
Dr. Imperato himself, who was under the impression that he would also get that post.

"I have not been very closely involved with the problems of the Health and Hospitals Corporation," he said, "but over the next several weeks, I will familiarize myself with that department. I am thoroughly familiar with the problem of the Health Department." Dr. Imperato has served as first deputy health commissioner since 1974.
A spokesman for the Mayor's office said that there were several proposals under study for restructuring the city's health delivery methods and that since Dr. Imperato would not take office until Jan. 1, the matter of a new chairman of the Health and Hospital Corporation had not yet been settled.
The question of whether Dr. Imperato gets the job comes at a time when Mayor Beame is moving to exert more control over the Health and Hospitals Corporation, a theoretically independent corporation.
Dr. Bellin, who resigned earlier this month from his $47,093-a-year post to resume his position as head of the Division of Public Health Administration at Columbia University, was respected for his work as Health Commissioner. However, he was criticized in his role as chairman of the Health and Hospitals Board for not being forceful enough.
According to state statute, the head of the city's Health Services Administration automatically becomes chairman of the Health and Hospitals board. But the Mayor's spokesman noted that a proposal to dismantle the superagency was now under study.
Dr. Imperato is a specialist in epidemic control and tropical medicine. He has been active in pushing the swine flu vaccination program, although he says the Federal Government has not given the program enough money.

INTERNATIONAL PAPER MOVING IN NEW YORK

to Expand Headquarters by 40% — Improved Business Climate Is Cited

By MICHAEL STERNE
International Paper Company, the largest maker of forest products, yesterday announced a major expansion in New York City that will add 40 percent to its headquarters offices and employ many more employees to its force of 1,500.
"It is the logical world headquarters for a multinational corporation," said Robert Smith, the company's chairman, explaining why he and his colleagues had rejected alternative sites in other cities.
The company's need for more headquarters space was dictated by a jump

Smith is the logical headquarters for a multinational corporation.

In the last three years from $3.5 billion annually and is of continued growth.
Mayor Carey and Mayor Beame approval, Mr. Smith told a group in the company offices yesterday that "an improving business climate were the principal reason for the decision to remain and grow

Local Changes Cited

Elements of the new climate include state and city officials' local responsibility, to develop policies, to keep streets safe and to recognize other business.

They will retain the 340,000 square feet now has in the News Building, 145,000 square feet more of a new building around 685 Third Avenue, near 43d Street which refused to divulge the new space but described the alternative.

Office buildings in the city from an average of $12 a foot to about $8 a square foot to overbuilding and to a population of 400,000 people since 1969.

The company signed last week a payroll of $42 million is expected to grow substantially last three years, transfer offices and the growth have added 300 people to the staff.

Companies Lost

Paper's decision to remain in the city follows the lead of companies as Philip Morris, Johnson and Johnson, and Engelhard Minerals.

In the 1960's, when New York was one of the 500 largest industries, more than 50 have left. Earlier this year, further indicated by the announcement of Carbide, General Host, and others that they, too, were leaving.

Yesterday's news conference was attended by the State Commissioner, John S. Dyson, and Deputy Mayor for Economic Development, Osborn Elliott, who said that such defections were a problem.

Carey said that "whatever these companies move do not obtain any more are proving, in concrete terms, that this state can attract business."

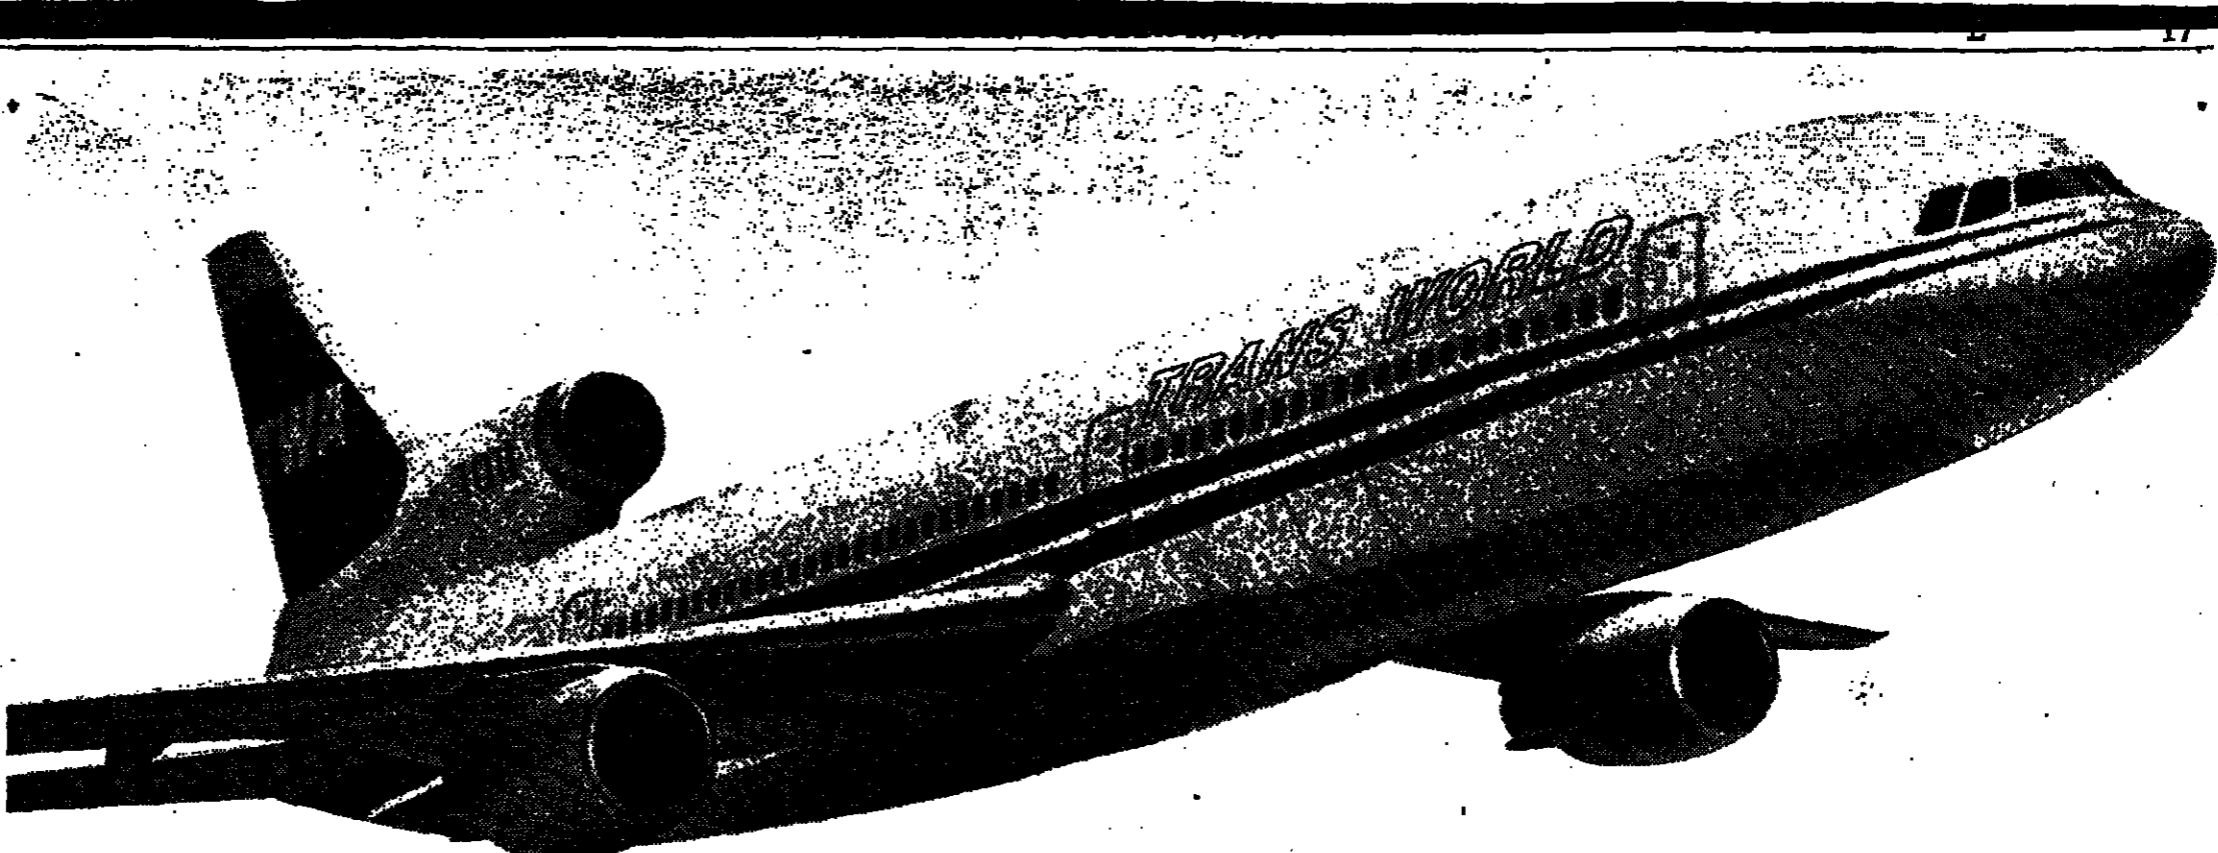

Mr. Carey in salute to the city's decision and said that New York City as the center of business.

Virginia, a State With Many Changes, Is Still Expected to Return Byrd to the Sen

By B. DRUMMOND AYRES Jr.
Special to The New York Times

RICHMOND, Oct. 19—Tomorrow marks the 10th anniversary of the death of Senator Harry F. Byrd Sr., the conservative Virginia Democrat whose gentlemanly political juggernaut maintained the status quo in the Old Dominion for more than three decades.

In the years since the Senator died, Virginia has become one of the country's half-dozen or so most rapidly changing states, an upper South leader in population growth, economic expansion, educational improvement and racial moderation.

Many fresh political faces and new political alignments have cropped up as the aging, rural-dominated Byrd machine—the "organization" to its friends—has this fall among most of its members is that old Byrd standby—fiscal responsibility.

As James R. Sweeney, a student of Old Dominion politics, writes in the current issue of the Virginia Quarterly Review, a scholarly magazine published by the University of Virginia:

"No Virginian of the 20th century has left so deep an imprint on the politics of the Old Dominion as did Senator Harry F. Byrd Sr. who died 10 years ago this fall. The decade since 1966 has produced political conflict and change in Virginia beyond anything imaginable in the years when Senator Byrd presided over the state's dominant political organization. The Byrd machine has disappeared, but the political philosophy of its leaders remains powerful in the Commonwealth."

The "conflict and change" referred to by Mr. Sweeney have so blurred party lines in Virginia that Harry Byrd Jr., though he looks, talks and votes like his father, has abandoned the Democratic Party and become an independent in order to remain true to the old political philosophy.

The younger Byrd first went to the Senate on a gubernatorial appointment after his father's mid-term retirement in 1965 because of failing health. The next year, running as a Democrat, he won the seat in a special election.

A New Format

"After that," he said the other day while campaigning in the Norfolk area, "I saw the need for a new political format because the state was growing so fast and because political rules were changing and the Democratic Party was becoming more and more liberal."

"I made a conscious effort to stay away from the organization," he continued. "I became an independent and it worked. I find I can serve my state solely by voting on the issues now, not by party, which is the most important thing to people these days."

Senator Byrd, who is 61 years old, is campaigning this fall on the slogan, "A Virginian for Virginia." That is not an insignificant theme in a state that still puts great emphasis on family and lineage, despite having increased its population by almost 20 percent in the last decade, mainly through the addition of people from outside the state.

A moderate Democrat, is not a native Virginian. He was born 55 years ago in California, but his campaign biography pointedly states only that "his Virginia heritage dates back to 1764, when his forefather, Andrew Zumwalt, settled in Frederick County."

Zumwalt's Charge

Admiral Zumwalt, perhaps best known for his role in liberalizing Navy dress codes and recruiting practices, contends that Senator Byrd has no political clout in Washington because "he's just a party of one."

Admiral Zumwalt is putting in 20-hour days in a strong effort to overcome Senator Byrd. But he remains short of money and organization.

Senator Byrd, on the other hand, has no serious money problems. Political professionals say that enough old Democrats and new Republicans are pouring funds and time into his campaign to assure him an easy victory in November.

"He might win by as big as 60 to 40," Governor Godwin predicted one day last week.

A third candidate, Martin Perper, a 37-year-old northern Virginia hotel owner, is given no chance in the race. He is a little-known moderate Republican who recently switched to independent status.

Steady Turnover

Democrats still run the state at the local level, where personality overrides the national party's liberal ideology. But in statewide races, the situation is extremely fluid and candidates tend sometimes to cast about for the best ideological identity of the moment, often coming up with a conservative Republican identity.

Since the elder Byrd died—the state was heavily Democratic at almost all levels at the time—Virginia has voted twice for a Republican President and is leaning Republican this year. It has elected two Republican Governors (including Mr. Godwin, who was a Democrat in his first term), a Republican senator and almost a dozen Republican United States Representatives. Currently, its 12-member House and Senate delegation consists of six Republicans, five Democrats and the independent Mr. Byrd.

The delegation's voting record has remained predictably conservative or middle of the road except for deviations by House members representing the two districts in the northern Virginia-suburbs next to Washington.

Those districts contain a million of Virginia's five million people and is the fastest growing part of the area whose residents are well educated and more liberal than the "downstate" Virginians. Only about every three northern Virginians—born, compared to two of every Virginians elsewhere.

The northern Virginians have leaders in a struggle that has General Assembly, once rural to acknowledge that the Old has become the "new dominant dominantly urban" state. The black voters, newly registered since a poll tax, have joined the Virginians in this fight.

Overall, however, black votes in Virginia remains unwavering make up almost a fifth of the but they account for about a the average turnout.

The Race for Congress

come apart under the impact of urbanization and Federal abolition of gerrymandering and the poll tax.

But Virginia is not yet completely out of the "Byrd age." For the fall of 1976 finds the late Senator's son, Harry F. Byrd Jr., sitting in his father's old Capitol Hill seat, heavily favored to win re-election to a second term in a race with Admiral Elmo Zumwalt, the retired Chief of Naval Operations.

There are other signs, too, that the state has not yet made full political peace with the 20th century, that the more things change in a place that boasts of 369 years of tradition, the more they tend to stay the same.

The current Governor, Mills E. Godwin, is the same Mills Godwin who was Governor at the time of the elder Byrd's death in 1966.

The Virginia General Assembly is still a legislative body that puts as much premium on courtly decorum as new laws, the prevailing feeling being that the latter frequently do as much harm as good.

The Virginia Congressional delegation is still one of the most conservative in Washington, and the call for re-election

The Tricentennial in your opinion.

Some time ago we ran an ad asking for your thoughts on life in the year 2076.

The response was overwhelming. Thousands of people from across the country took the time to write and let us know what they were thinking.

We heard from senior citizens and kids in elementary school. From liberals and conservatives, in every state of the union...

To all of you who wrote us, we thank you. Your opinions intrigued us. And encouraged us.

For here at Atlantic Richfield Company, we believe that a better future for America and the world starts as a matter of opinion.

Below are excerpts from four of the more than 53,000 responses we received.

(The following are excerpts from a Graduation Day address inspired by the Tricentennial Program, and delivered at the University of Texas, June 1976)

Many advertisements have been generated by graduation exercises. As far as I know, this is the first graduation speech that was inspired by an advertisement...

I am titillated by the question: What of a hundred years from now?

As teachers, you will very likely be teaching children who will be living in 2076. What can I say to you today that might have impact on them? What would I challenge you to give your students to survive in our unknown future?

The very things I would give to you, if I could:

I would give you curiosity—a wonder for all the world about you.

I would give you courage. For life is not gentle, nor a safe place. You are your own "safe place."

I would give you a belief in yourselves.

I would give you the right to succeed and the right to fail.

I would give you a sense of humor, for laughter is a joyful sound.

And finally, above all, I would give you the capacity to live your lives to the fullest. To love and be loved. To know the ecstasies, the agonies, the joys and sorrows. Take the time to contemplate some of our eternal mysteries—the unfurling of a leaf, the sprouting of a seed, the poetry of a bird on wing—all the things which combined, make for you a full life.

I would give all these things to you. I would have you give them to your future students. If they have these things, could they not meet 2076? Or 3076? Or even 1977?

Dear Tricentennial,

Here is my idea: To make a commercial with a little kid reading a letter saying:

Dear Parents:

You are always saying you love us. If you really love us, you would save something for us to look forward to. So please try to do your best to keep the world liveable for us, because we have to have somewhere to live too. Also our children, your grandchildren, need a place to live too. So, this is not just your world. It's ours too.

Thank you,

Your Children

Not Guilty

of the aerosol spray paints manufactured today do not affect the ozone layer

Unfortunately, most people have been led to believe that all aerosols are harmful to the future of our planet.

That is not true.

The majority of aerosol products on the shelves right now are in no way suspected of affecting our environment. Guilt-free, you may enjoy the convenience and efficiency of virtually all spray paints, insecticides, shaving lathers, and food toppings.

The confusion has resulted from the blanket condemnation of all aerosols—when the point in question is not aerosols, but the use of fluorocarbon gases as propellants.

A panel of The National Academy of Sciences has considered the problem of fluorocarbon gases weakening our planet's ozone layer and threatening to affect the earth's climate.

They have recommended select regulation of the uses of fluorocarbon gases and have suggested two years be allowed for further scientific study.

Unquestionably, that is something scientists and government agencies must resolve.

But we feel it is equally important for the people to understand that the greatest number of aerosol products produced in this country do not use fluorocarbon propellants. Almost without exception, all spray paint manufacturers use hydrocarbons, and hydrocarbon propellants pose no threat to the earth's upper atmosphere.

We at New York Bronze state unequivocally that none of our products contains fluorocarbons. Furthermore, we pledge to avoid the use of any chemicals or systems that have been adjudged harmful or deleterious by any recognized and responsible authority.

Do you remember the mess we would go through to paint with a brush? Do you remember the nuisance of making shaving lather? Or the time and trouble in mixing and dispensing insect sprays? Or whipped cream?

Today, most aerosol sprays are not only useful, economical, and convenient—but also ecologically safe. Misinformation should not deny any of us their benefits or the pleasurable experience of using them.

"The other day we talked about fluorocarbons, the aerosol spray can propellants that may be damaging the environment, and I think it's possible that we left a false impression among some viewers. What we said during the discussions, and what I want to emphasize again, is that fluorocarbons are the propellants used in only about half the spray can products on the market. They are other propellants used in aerosol spray cans that are NOT suspected of causing any environmental damage—the propellants used in spray paint cans, just as one example. So don't automatically shy away from EVERY spray can product on the market out of concern for the environment. Remember that one of every two such products is free of suspicion."

Tom Brokaw, Today Show, Sept. 22, 1976

"The only harmful sprays are those using fluorocarbons to do the spraying, mostly used for such cosmetics as hair spray. Spray cans of paint, shaving lather and others are harmless. They don't use fluorocarbons, and will continue unchanged."

Moynihan Urges Manufacturers That Are Planning to Leave State of New York to Postpone Moves

EDITH EVANS ASBURY
Special to The New York Times
O. Oct. 19—Daniel P. Moynihan, Democratic-Liberal candidate for U.S. Senator from New York, urged manufacturers who are planning to leave the state to postpone their moves for six months to give the new administration a chance to show that it will not be necessary to take drastic action. Moynihan began his campaigning in Rochester with several television appearances beginning at 8 A.M. and a column in the editorial board of Gannett. In an interview he was asked whether he would support the call by his opponent.

Senator James L. Buckley, Conservative-Republican, for the resignation of Gen. George S. Brown as Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff. Each time he said General Brown was merely reflecting the foreign policy of the Ford Administration when the general said Israel was a "burden" militarily to the United States.

Tickets for Speeding

"That policy is wrong and should be changed," Mr. Moynihan said, "but I would let the Commander in Chief handle his offices for the next days of the campaign."

Mr. Moynihan and a party of reporters traveled in two automobiles from Rochester to Buffalo that were stopped by the state police and given tickets for speeding. One of the officers remarked to one of the two volunteer drivers that "you're going before the same judge Horton did." He referred to Justice of the Peace Frederick Muskoff of the Town of Stafford in Genesee County, where the tickets are returnable at 8 P.M. Tuesday, Nov. 2—Election Day. Justice Muskoff sentenced Representative Frank J. Horton, Republican candidate for re-election, to 15 days for speeding and other offenses last summer. Representative Horton declined to appeal, served the sentence and is expected to win overwhelmingly because he faced up to the charges and took his medicine.

Mr. Moynihan, slumped down in the front seat next to the volunteer driver, the son of a local party worker, was ostensibly asleep, his familiar tweed hat resting low on his forehead, while the police officer talked to the driver. He took no part in the conversation.

'Some Breathing Space'

Mr. Moynihan's appeal in Buffalo to manufacturers planning to leave the state to postpone their plans came at the gates of a Westinghouse Electric plant. The company announced plans last week to close down a section employing 750 men and women and move it out of the state. "The Democratic Party and Jimmy Carter are dedicated to fulfilling sections of the party platform that would take into account in future Federal policy the special economic needs of the depressed metropolitan areas such as metropolitan Buffalo," Mr. Moynihan said at a news conference outside the gates of the plant at Cheektowaga, a suburb of Buffalo.

"As Senator," he said, "I intend to fight for this policy, and I appeal to the companies that have helped make this state great to give us some breathing space to meet their needs so the trend of movement from New York might be arrested."

ing trades a 50 percent jobless rate. He also noted that unemployment benefits had expired for many, with a resulting increase in welfare costs. While this has been happening "before the eyes of the Junior Senator from New York [Senator Buckley], he has voted against virtually every job-creation bill before Congress, against the welfare reform I helped write," and has voted no "time and time again to not only the present but to the future of New York," Mr. Moynihan asserted. A spokesman for the company said that the section to be closed was the fourth largest of five sections in size, adding that there were 4,250 employees in the other sections.

Lindberg Memorial Fund Begun By Doolittle and Neil Armstrong

By JOHN NOBLE WILFORD

Two pilots of note, Gen. James M. Doolittle and Neil A. Armstrong, announced yesterday plans to honor one of the most celebrated aviators with the establishment of the Charles A. Lindbergh Memorial Fund to support the work of young scientists, explorers and conservationists.

General Doolittle, who led the first World War II air raid on Tokyo, and Mr. Armstrong, the first man to walk on the moon, will direct a drive to raise a $5-million endowment for the fund between now and May 20, 1977—the 50th anniversary of Mr. Lindbergh's takeoff on the first solo nonstop flight across the Atlantic Ocean.

Income from the endowment, expected to be about $400,000 annually, will be distributed to Lindbergh Fellows who, Mr. Doolittle said, "will combine qualities that made Slim [Mr. Lindbergh] a unique human."

Other Lindbergh Interests

Mr. Lindbergh died Aug. 26, 1974, at the age of 72. After his epic flight from New York to Paris, he continued in aviation as a test pilot and airline executive, but also branched out into medical technology research and, increasingly in his later years, wildlife conservation.

Announcement of the memorial fund was made at a news conference at the Wings Club in the Hotel Biltmore, Headquarters of the fund are at 30 East 42nd Street, New York, N.Y. 10017.

General Doolittle, who will be 80 years old in December, stood erect and spoke in a clear, commanding voice to reporters. He said that he was sure that Mr. Lindbergh "would have been happier with a living memorial than one out of bronze and stone," and that the fund, so conceived, would "carry on the projects in which Slim was interested."

Members of the fund's sponsoring committee are prominent representatives of all the fields of Mr. Lindbergh's interests—ecology, wildlife preservation and exploration. Two of the sponsoring organizations are the Explorers Club and the World Wildlife Fund.

The announcement of Lindbergh Fellows will be made annually on May 21, the anniversary of the pilot's arrival in Paris after the 33-hour flight in the "Spirit of St. Louis."

Mr. Armstrong showed up 15 minutes late for the conference, apologizing by saying:

"I've mastered some kinds of transportation, but not the streets of New York."

The former astronaut and commander of the Apollo II mission to the moon is now 46 and a professor of aerospace engineering at the University of Cincinnati. Coincidentally, like Mr. Lindbergh, one of Mr. Armstrong's post-flight interests is research in medical technology.

Couple Ordered Held for Murder in Beating Death of Daughter, 4

CLEVELAND, TENN., Oct. 19 (AP)—Ronald and Wanda Maddux today were ordered held for grand jury action on charges of first-degree murder in the beating death of Mrs. Maddux's 4-year-old daughter, Melisha Morgana Gibson.

The child was taken away from them in 1974 when they went to jail for abusing her, but she was later returned to the couple.

The couple continued to be held without bond after the case was turned over today to a Bradley county grand jury, by General Sessions Court.

District Attorney Richard Fisher told the court "We have evidence that Ronald Maddux actually beat the child to death," and her natural mother sat there watching from Monday night, when this ordeal started."

Joe Bagwell, court-appointed attorney for Mrs. Maddux, asked that the first-degree murder charge be dismissed.

Transcendental Meditation Session Proving Popular at United Nations

UNITED NATIONS, N. Y., Oct. 19—The delegates slipped out of the General Assembly. Almost furtively, they ducked into an unmarked conference room down the hall.
 The session there had just begun, but there were no speakers, no debates, no arguments—just silence, and the faint fragrance of sandalwood perfume. The participants—women in colored saris or denims, men in jeans or work uniforms, and others in conservative dress—sat still and erect in their chairs, facing a rostrum that was simply decorated with a bouquet of yellow chrysanthemums and red roses.
 Seated on the rostrum was the master, draped in a long white garment and a sky-blue blouse, his eyes staring into space.
 The delegates who slipped in had discreetly taken up two of the remaining seats. Together with the others in the conference room, palms folded before their chests and eyes half closed, they began to meditate.

Envoys Among Meditators
 "We don't differentiate, but I have noted ambassadors and high U.N. officials among our meditators," said Larry Gelber, who has for two years been teaching transcendental meditation at the Manhattan World Plan Center. A United Nations source said all 10 members of a South American mission, "from the ambassador down," are were "active" meditators—that is, people who spend 20 to 40 minutes a day meditating.
 Jim Karambelas, a United Nations interpreter from New Jersey, explained, "Simultaneous translation at the U.N. is a very high pressure job," he said. "T.M. helps release your pressures, increase your energy, your capacity for concentration, your adaptability. It makes instant response easy and effortless, and you don't get bogged down in your work."

John Foster, director of the Manhattan center, one of eight in the metropolitan area that offers the transcendental meditation program as taught by the Mahareshi Mahesh Yogi, said: "The U.N. people are increasingly looking to T.M., which is an effective way to combat the stress and strains of daily life, the routine and boredom, or the fatigue and frustration of the season."

Group Meets Twice a Week
 The group, under the direction of Sri Chinmoy, was accredited to the United Nations last year as one of the so-called nongovernmental organizations functioning alongside the official bodies. It has been meeting twice a week, with about 100 people attending on a typical day.

Sri Chinmoy, a 45-year-old Bengali, came to the United States in 1964 "in response to an inner command," according to his biography, "to offer his inner wealth to aspiring seekers in the West."

Obviously, the group takes no political stands on the official issues facing the delegates. That is not what meditation is about. Yet in a diplomatic setting, the pressures of international politics must also be the concern of the guru, or teacher-leader.

"How do you view world problems, and how can they be solved?" a visitor asked Sri Chinmoy at a recent meditation session. "The problems of the world are like teeming clouds in the sky," he replied in a high, halting voice, his eyes half closed. "But the sun is still shining high above and there will come a time when the sun will disperse the clouds. Constant meditation will help us solve all of our problems and all the world problems. We will immerse in a sea of wisdom-life instead of sinking in the sea of ignorance-life."

Mrs. Gandhi's Daughter-in-Law Starts Magazine in Positive Vein

By WILLIAM BORDERS
Special to The New York Times

NEW DELHI, Oct. 19—Prime Minister Indira Gandhi's 20-year-old daughter-in-law has begun publishing a monthly magazine dedicated to describing "the dynamics of a changing India in a positive, confident way."

The magazine, called Surya, which means sun in Hindi, reflects a growing preoccupation with eradicating what the people running India regard as the negative attitude of this country's journalism.

In a letter from the editor in the first issue of Surya, Maneka Gandhi, who is married to the Prime Minister's powerful son, Sanjay, said: "Too many Indian publications have succumbed to a largely imported attitude toward this country that harps on shortcomings and belittles achievement. Surya will attempt to highlight all that is positive in our national endeavor—yet be unsparing in criticism of what deserves to be criticized."

Such sentiments are responsive to the conviction, often stated by Prime Minister Gandhi in the 15 months since her Government imposed rigid press censorship, that India's newspapers can never be permitted to return to what she calls "their indisciplined old ways."

Press Called 'Major Culprit'

In the political turmoil that the Government says necessitated the imposition of a sweeping state of emergency last year, "the press was the major culprit" because of an attitude so negative that it "breaks the country's spirit," the Prime Minister says.

And now, with new laws and regulations that bring the newspapers and magazines firmly under the Government's control, there is an official determination to steer them in a new direction.

"Journalists should once again become missionaries of a new, resurgent India," Deputy Information Minister Dharam Bir Sinha said recently. "The prophets of gloom who dominated the press so long have to yield place to those with a positive approach."

That kind of thinking is behind the Government's year-long battle to replace the top editorial management of the Indian Express, the country's largest newspaper chain. Last week, in what the Government said was a tax dispute, the police sealed the presses of the paper's New Delhi edition, forcing it to miss publication for two days. It missed two other days of publication earlier this month because of a mysterious power failure.

Openly Opposed Mrs. Gandhi

The Indian Express openly opposed Prime Minister Gandhi before censorship. The newspaper typified what Maneka Gandhi, in her new magazine, calls journalistic "defeatism," which she promises to avoid.

Surya's lead article, entitled "India's Great Leap Forward," reviews the familiar comparison between development in China and in India and concludes that although China has done better industrially India has advanced further in agriculture.

The slick 68-page magazine carries a range of other articles, including one recalling how the British colonialists ravaged India's architectural treasures. Another, called "Lines From a Bad Brahmin," gently ridicules the caste system.

The magazine also carries advertisements purchased by some of India's major corporations. Some critics say the advertisers are trying to curry favor with Sanjay Gandhi, who at 29 is one of the most important people in India.

Maneka Gandhi's mother, Amteshwar Anand, who is helping run the magazine, conceded during a chat at its hectic editorial office here that "there's no problem getting advertising." She also said that Surya's circulation for the first issue earlier this month was 30,000 but that it would grow to 50,000 for the November issue.

FAMILY STRESS CALLED DANGER TO HEALTH

Researcher Tells Medical
That Reducing Tension
Will Help Combat Disease

By NANCY HICES
Special to The New York Times

BETHLEHEM, Pa., Oct. 18—A Harvard health researcher told his colleagues today that their newest and most difficult challenge in the incidence of disease in this is finding better ways to help combat stress.

Robert J. Haggerty of the Harvard School of Public Health told a meeting "accidents and abuse have been two to three times as common in families with frequent moves, relocations, and evidence of social dysfunction such as unmarried mothers, problems, unemployment."

This has been known to some for several decades now, studies linking the phenomena are increasing. The subject has also become important in discussion of enacting some health insurance system, which will be flooded by the "worried-well" whose life circumstances, in disease, make them feel ill and need medical care.

Dr. Haggerty, who is holding the 4th annual meeting here this morning, "challenged" his colleagues to find new ways to help families.

Carter Speaks

Events opened with a speech by a Democratic Presidential candidate, Carter, who registered the need for some comprehensive national health insurance program, which emphasizes preventive services. Health prevention was the theme of this conference.

Carter's speech to the liberal arts students, representing 50,000 doctors, engineers, dentists, architects, health workers, contained a warning and left the sympathetic audience wondering what they can do to help.

Dr. Haggerty said he is interested in health care and are desperately hopeful that will be elected and there will be changes after January to start on it," said Dr. H. Jack Geiger, of the department of community health at the State University of Stony Brook.

He said that people with that point of view encouraged this morning to it," he said.

Cites His Study

In a discussion of stress, Dr. Haggerty said 15 years ago, he found in a study that streptococcal infections to be four times as frequent as during more tranquil times, he still sees the same trends, he said. "The mechanism by which stress works to increase the susceptibility to disease is not clear."

When stress is identified as a cause of illness, he said, exactly what is not clear, especially when marital conflicts or trouble in the law are found to be the cause of the problem.

Dr. Haggerty said that clinicians should help patients through such crises by existing community institutions, social clubs, adult programs, parent groups and organizations.

He also help in the public policy making public health programs. In the sense of the term, he said, it delineates housing policies for three generations of families to live near each other, involve people less, and when proximity is not possible, easy communication such as telephone contact or vacations.

Haggerty said.

SURVEY IS HALTED IN SCHOOL DISTRICT

Special to The New York Times

NEW YORK, Oct. 19—A racial survey of students, aimed at preparing for re-ordered integration, has been halted because the survey may be a violation of privacy.

A teacher and a parent argued before the Superior Court that which collects students' addresses, and information on their parents, and the language spoken at home, violates privacy rights guaranteed by the United States Constitution and state laws.

The parents are Jewish, American Indian, and Spanish-surnamed and white, and they said that the school district is collecting information from students without the parents' consent.

The court issued a preliminary injunction halting the school district from processing the information, saying the legality has been decided.

The school district has conducted racial surveys annually since 1965, but the surveys have not identified the students' names and addresses.

Plans to Make Airport
Center of a Transit Network

NEW JERSEY, Oct. 19 (UPI)—Mayor Kenneth Gibson is pushing a plan to make the new national airport the center of a transit network connecting much of New Jersey.

As outlined yesterday by the Mayor's staff, calls for a transit system costing between $500 million and $1 billion. Mr. Gibson said the transit system could be financed by a 1978 Airport and Airway Act, which provides money for surface transit projects.

The chief transportation planner, said the proposal calls for a terminal serving all modes of transport, a bus terminal, moving parking facility and a "people-mover" to carry passengers from the terminal to the airport.

Mr. Gibson has asked the Transportation Secretary to name a study the proposal.

A Fiery Moon Spectacle in 1178, Described in Contemporary Report, Linked to Crater

By WALTER SULLIVAN
Special to The New York Times

BETHLEHEM, Pa., Oct. 18—On the evening of June 18, 1178, according to a contemporary account, "a flaming torch sprang up" from the moon, "spewing out, over a considerable distance, fire, hot coals, and sparks."

Then, the report said, "the body of the moon which was below writhed, as it were, in anxiety." Furthermore it "throbbed like a wounded snake."

At a conference on meteorites being held here this week it has been proposed that this was the impact of a giant meteorite onto the moon, which left a crater a dozen miles wide that is now known as Giordano Bruno. Rays of debris radiating from the crater mark it as one of the most recently formed on the moon.

The proposal was presented by Dr. Jack B. Hartung of the State University of New York at Stony Brook to the four-day annual meeting of the Meteoritical Society, which began yesterday at Lehigh University here.

The account to which he referred was chronicled by Gervase of Canterbury, based on reports by five or more English monks. The latter, he said, "are prepared to stake their honor on an oath that they have made no addition or falsification in the above narrative."

The moon at the time—"the Sunday before the Feast of St. John the Baptist"—was a thin crescent, almost all the earth-facing side being in darkness.

Suddenly, according to the account, the upper horn of the sunlit crescent split in two and it was from the midpoint of this division that the flames shot out.

The Moon Appears Split

The eruption was repeated a dozen times or more. Then, after the moon returned to normal, the whole length of the crescent "took on a blackish appearance."

According to Dr. Hartung's reconstruction the apparent splitting of the horn occurred when that area of the moon was obscured or shadowed by a cloud of debris thrown up by the impact. The spewing flame indicated that incandescent solids or gases were ejected.

The apparent writhing and throbbing "like a wounded snake" could have been caused by the distortions of light from the moon while the moon was briefly enveloped in a turbulent atmosphere of gases released from within or generated by vaporization of material from the impact explosion.

The residual crater, Dr. Hartung said, should be in the vicinity of 45 degrees north latitude and 90 degrees east longitude. This is near the edge of the moon's visible disk and is close to the site of Giordano Bruno. In photographs taken from lunar orbit, bright rays rivaling those of Tycho—the most prominent such crater on the moon—radiate in all directions from the crater.

The rays appear to be trains of debris or of little craters formed by material flying out from the explosion.

"The length of the rays," according to Dr. Hartung, relative to the diameter of the crater, is as great as, or greater than, for Giordano Bruno than for any other large lunar crater, "thus indicating independently that this is among the most recently formed craters on the moon. This observation, concludes that the formation of Giordano Bruno was witnessed on the evening of June 18, 1178.

His proposal, presented at a session yesterday morning, was still being debated today by participants in the meeting. Some suggested that the effect could have been produced by a fireball passing in front of the moon, through the earth's own atmosphere.

Something for Everybody, but Modern Is Rising

By RITA REIF
Special to The New York Times

HIGH POINT, N. C.—The country's furniture manufacturers have once again made certain there is something for everybody in their offerings of styles that date back to Magna Carta and up to Milan Modern.

As varied as are these collections, it is obvious at the Southern Furniture Market showings here that four design trends dominate: nostalgic, rattan, modern and Oriental.

The nostalgic look is the most talked about traditional development to emerge in years. It updates the golden oak designs from the turn of the century so popular in flea markets today.

But the rage for rattan, reeds and bamboo may be even more pervasive. The range goes from designs that echo the early 19th-century furnishings of Britain's Brighton Pavilion through mid-20th-century wicker palm chairs that Billy Baldwin helped popularize.

And then there's modern. It's the style that industry giants are convinced may finally begin to unseat Early American as the country's top seller. These manufacturers' views are bolstered by the survey of collections made in April by the Fine Hardwoods-American Walnut Association. The findings placed modern at a new high of 25.9 percent of all designs shown, second only to Early American, which represented 37.4 percent. Italian traditional placed third at 13.7 percent and Mediterranean was a poor fourth at 7.8 percent.

Oriental Will Surface

Oriental, a style that has not yet surfaced in the polls, soon will, judging by what is happening here. It's the mode that mixes modern Indian campaign designs, Ming-like tables and chairs, Korean chests and pagoda-roofed, bamboo-embellished cupboards and etageres.

The bounty of bamboo, rattan and woven reed furniture designs tops all categories. The range of what is now available framed in palms and grasses is astounding. John Mascheroni, the versatile New York designer, has explored the possibilities of these materials and come forth with palm-wrapped, chrome-accented lamps shown by George Kovacs, and pillow furniture framed in rattan that serves for sitting and, as tables, for serving introduced by Raymond/Richards Morganthau Inc.

Of all the modern rattan designs on view, the most innovative are those from Design Institute of America. The tables have bronze glass tops and pole rattan legs that flare gracefully into wide shoulders. The wicker producer's chests has an ingenious pull-out ottoman, and there's a traditional touch too—a Chinese pavilion chair that would have been at home in Peking two centuries ago.

As far as complete collections go, however, Milo Baughman's for Thayer Coggin is far and away the most successful. Mr. Baughman is not the first designer to realize that rattan worked into a grid of squares can result in some of the simplest and handsomest treatments of the material. But the designs he devised—the rattan-framed chairs, beds, benches, night stands and tables—are done extremely well, and he has exercised a pleasing restraint. Of the dozens of manufacturers offering bamboo-accented collections some of the best buys are found at American of Martinsville, a manufacturer emphasizing scaled-down bedroom chests and tables that work for modern apartments. The bamboo "High Rise" collection includes selections that would, for instance, provide a three-piece bedroom (chest, night stand and bed) at from $1,000 to $1,500.

Thomasville goes further in its Brighton Pavilion collection, some of which can be accommodated in the planters and fern stands offered in the collection. The bedroom and dining room designs are faced with split bamboo fretwork and topped with spindle-supported galleries of the material.

Elsewhere at Thomasville, the rattan story continues in several stunning imports, including a pagoda-roofed stagère (about $550) and woven palm armchair that echoes the one Billy Baldwin popularized in the 1950's. The copy will be about $270, or less than half the price of the original, which is made by Bielecky brothers Inc. of New York, when the collection reaches stores early next year.

Many Forms of Modern

Modern these days takes as many forms as it has meanings to American manufacturers. There are, for instance, the modern collections in painted white or gray wood that echo austere-styled West German imports. (Founders and Bassett). Blond wood, as in Scandinavian styling shows up a Lane and Stratford and countless producers are doing the boxy, all-wood look that became known more than a decade ago as architectural modern.

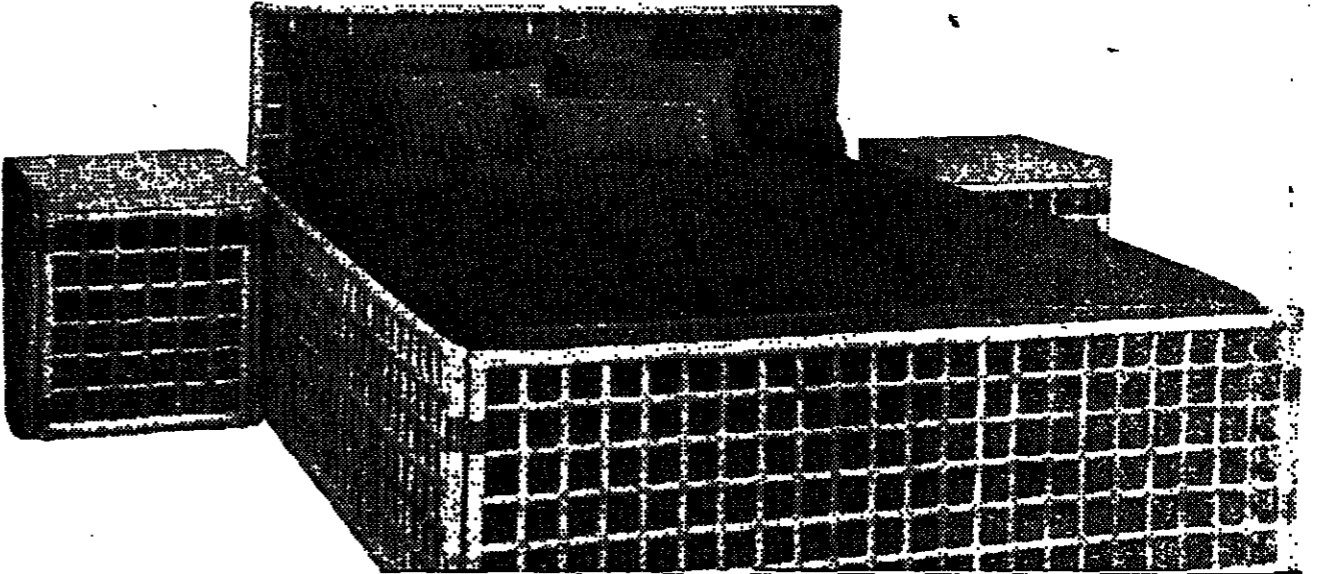

But in whatever form it appears (upholstery is mostly Milan Modern), modern seems headed for sales success according to most producers. A barometer of how popular contemporary styling is can be seen in the move of such traditionalists as Tomlinson Furniture to go modern too. Not surprisingly, the modern chosen is both conservative and decorative. Architectural in profile, the collection called Intro 80, is enriched by both the lagoda burl veneers and the brass frames and legs.

The campaign designs that show up as tables, nightstands and floor-to-ceiling wall systems are a far cry in quality and price from what Baker Furniture offered as its trademark for decades. And the oriental at Drexel Heritage Furnishings—both the rattan look in its Malay group and the Chinese interpretations in the Et Cetera collection—do not overdo.

No doubt such restraint will appeal to thousands. But the truly splendid Oriental designs are those at Henredon. Both its Chinese household Ming-like tables and its Korean chests, lacquered cinerary red, are in scale, wood finishes and design details close approximations of period designs. Therein lies the collection's excellence.

Rome in New York: Couture for Charity

By BERNADINE MORRIS

The grapes glistened on the verdant green table linen. Diana Vreeland, everybody's fashion heroine, received an award. Princess Irene Galitzine, the Rome couturier, presented her collection for the first time in years in New York.

More than 450 people paid $40 a ticket for the luncheon at the Plaza Hotel yesterday, and Joanne Winship, the organizer, said that most of it would go to charity, Girls Town of Italy.

"There isn't an Italian-American in the world who wants to hear my name," she said. "I scrounged everything, including the 350 pounds of grapes. Even the table cloths were donated."

She even brought in her own chef, Luigi Nanni, to vouch for the authenticity of the menu: pasta e fagioli, vitello tonnato and monte bianco. It was so authentic that some of the audience didn't realize the pasta was supposed to be served tepid, peasant-style.

There wasn't anything peasant about the clothes, which were strictly couture. Not the sort that makes headlines, just the kind that women with a taste for quality, the time for fittings, and the money to pay for them like to wear for their private and public lives.

"The American press doesn't come to Rome any more, and the stores don't buy couture, but we have plenty of private customers," Princess Galitzine explained.

"We have many new Italian customers from places like Genoa and the south of Italy—people are getting rich in the provinces, and they come to Rome for their dresses."

The couture business is also supported by petro-dollars, she admits, and she also has a faithful American following. Jacqueline Onassis has promised to see her collection at the St. Regis hotel, where Princess Galitzine will stay for a week beginning Friday.

The emphasis is on evening clothes, often done in two parts "because that's what the clients like best." They're in a medley of soft fabrics and crisp silks, because the designer likes both types and points out that some customers have figures that are enhanced by tafeta, others look best in jersey.

Furs are shielded by silk raincoats, and the colors that stand out for evening are in the cerise to purple range. Daytime woolsens, mostly in warm, beige tones, are made in styles that just cover the knee and are always worn with boots.

"It's what the customers want," Princess Galitzine explained. She herself wore a black tunic over pants to take a bow after the show.

Accessories Also Appealing

The audience, which included constant fashion show viewers as well as women who came because their friends brought a table, approved of the accessories as well as the clothes. The high heel pumps with the diagonal straps across the instep were noticed by a number of women.

The other fashion in the audience was the Saint Laurent look, with or without the Russian fur-trimmed hat. Lee Thaw, Cecile Zilkha, Livia Weintraub and Laura Johnson were some of the advocates of the braid-edged, brightly colored, daytime look.

Mrs. Vreeland wrapped a classic Saint Laurent jacket over her purple Milla Schoen pants outfit, which was wrapped in scarves.

When she accepted her award from Mayor John Patrick Carroll—Abbing, president of Girls Town, for her achievement in the field of fashion, her remarks were as usual pithy and pointed.

"I know this man's work—he's the important one here," she said, and sat down. It was, after all, a charity luncheon.

Off the Mexican port of Vera Cruz, Rafael Hurtado, an octopus fisherman, found a 16th-century Spanish treasure of gold bars, bracelets and medallions. He though his troubles were over. But now he is in jail awaiting trial for selling the 51 pieces—without reporting his find to the Government—to a jeweler for $3,000. Investigators estimate that the gold is worth at least $25,000 as bullion. Archeologists say the treasure, apparently from a galleon stilling the Spanish Main, has a historical value beyond calculation.

At Miss Porter's School in Farmington, Conn., predictions about the year 2076 from 50 prominent American women will be buried in a time capsule at today's dedication of the new $1-million arts and sciences building. Margaret Chase Smith, former Senator from Maine, foresees a woman President by then but Jeanne Dixon, the seeress, is "not at all sure" about that. The capsule is a junior-class history project at the 134-year-old preparatory school for girls.

"In the year 2076," predicted Representative Bella S. Abzug of Manhattan. "I expect that Miss Porter's School will be Ms. Porter's School and its student body will include boys and girls." Julia Child, the cooking expert, expressed hope that women would continue to look like women. "An androgynous society," she said, "would be a crashing bore."

One boy chose the paddle but Terry Weatherman, 15 years old, and Bill Adkins, 14, took the tobacco from the 18 cigarettes, divided it and swallowed it. Both boys became ill, but when their mothers went to a school board meeting to protest, the board upheld the principal's authority.

Doctors have said the tobacco must have aggravated a small ulcer that the Adkins boy had been developing and his parents are threatening legal action. Said Mr. Hightower of the choice of punishments, "I feel like if the kids make up their own mind, then it's up to them."

Even the Restaurateur Was Awed By Her 'Little Dinner for Twenty-One

By KATHLEEN TELTSCH
Special to The New York Times

UNITED NATIONS, N. Y.—As a youngster growing up in Amstetten, Austria, Monika Pacher remembers her mother, busy in the family kitchen with schnitzel or rockerlin, telling her firmly: "The only way to learn is to do. You may have a disaster or two, do not mind."

Before she was 12, she was handed a length of cloth and directed, with the same maternal advice, to make a dress.

Predictably, the daughter grew up a happy but compulsive overachiever. She married and came to the United States with her own small daughter and her husband, Ulf, who is with the Austrian delegation here. She finds one a greasy outlet for all that pent-up creativity in throwing what the Pacherts persist in calling "little dinners" for friends in their Riverdale apartment.

The latest was planned for 18 and extended effortlessly to 21. There were Austrians and Hungarian diplomats, most of them in town for the current General Assembly. There were also

New Yorkers in Political life, among them State Senator Franz S. Leichter, because Ulf Pacher, by his own description, is "nuts" for American politics.

Who else would memorize the names of the 435 members of the House of Representatives, the 100 members of the Senate or the 50 governors and refer to Bella Abzug as "my Congresswoman," forgetting he has no vote?

'I Cook for Fun'

The other guests were Mr. and Mrs. Albert Giambelli, and Mrs. Pacher admits she thought twice before finding the courage to invite no less an authority on fine cuisine than Mr. Giambelli, the proprietor of Manhattan's Brussels Restaurant.

"He's a friend," she said, "but after all, I'm not professional, I cook for fun!"

It was under his knowing eyes that she assembled the first course of her cold buffet in the classic French style but with Pacher variations. The platter of truffled venison pâté en croûte was slipped deftly into place between the duck galantine and the glistening Lobster.

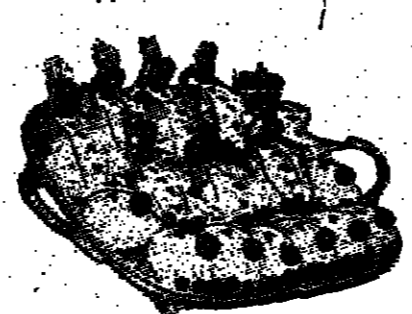

A quick sprinkle of minced parsley was added to the eggs in aspic, settled beside the smoked trout and the squab chaud-froid. Those were not truffles on the breasts of the tiny birds, but olive cutouts made with a truffle cutter. One has to trim costs somewhere, Mrs. Pacher sighed.

Only when Mr. Giambelli gave his requested inspection and pronounced a fervent "congratulations!" did she relax with a dazzling smile.

Lastly there was a parade of desserts, starting with the parfait Grand Marnier, a Spanish windtorte with its meringue crown, a malakoff torte Mrs. Pacher calls her never-fail insurance policy and that famed rich Viennese specialty which Mr. Giambelli gallantly suggested should be renamed from sachertorte to Pachertorte.

Big Helping!

Starting November 10, the every-Wednesday "The Living Section" will be helping you capture even more of the big New York market

"The Living Section" is the big, new separate 24-page food/family/entertainment guide that will help readers shop, eat and live better—and advertisers sell more effectively in the nation's No. 1 food market.

Every Wednesday, Craig Claiborne, Mimi Sheraton, Pierre Franey, Frank Priol as well as the world's most famous writers and personalities will present food, meals and cooking in a refreshing, fascinating way.

Other top Times editors and writers will describe the art of living in many other special ways—from the lives and life styles of celebrated people to news and views on personal health, personal finance, home furnishings and children.

Living will also feature theater and movie reviews, book reviews, the crossword puzzle, the Bridge column and much, much more.

So here's a lively, lavish new food medium that's designed to attract even more top-income readers in the New York market.

Like Food Day—The Times current eight-page food feature—Living will reach more shoppers than the Post, Star Ledger, The Bergen Record, Westchester/Rockland Group or the Long Island Press and Newsday combined. Living will also have the second highest readership of all newspapers among principal food shoppers in the New York market.

And now, with "The Living Section" advertisers can count on even more shoppers. A concentrated circulation promotion campaign that includes radio, TV and print advertising will give Living a sure-fire send-off—the same selling effort that launched Weekend, the thriving leisure-time, entertainment guide that has increased Friday circulation by 35,000 copies.

So if you want a bigger, better helping of the rich New York market, get into "The Living Section" starting November 10. Call Roger Brown at (212) 556-1447 at The Times for space reservations and advertising information. Or the Times representative near you.

WINE TALK

Autumn in Bordeaux, and the Early Word Is Hop

The exterior of Chateau Lafite, one of the most famous of the chateaus of Bordeaux

By FRANK J. PRIAL
Special to The New York Times
MARGAUX, France, Oct. 17 — The trees still are dark green in the Médoc but, down the symmetrical rows of vines, the grape leaves are red, gold, rust and bronze.

Table laden with buckets of food to be taken to harvesters in Lafite's fields

Autumn has arrived in Bordeaux. Over broiled cépes—the local mushroom—in a Margaux bistro or a delicate duck steak downtown at the Restaurant Dubern, everyone from banker to vintner discusses the vintage. Was it good? How good was it? Most of all, what will it mean for Bordeaux?

'A School of Humility'
Fifteen miles from here, at Chateau Haut-Brion, in Pessac, Jean Delmas, the manager, taps a series of vats in the chateau cellars, mixing a bit of the wine from each in a glass beaker. His guest sniffs, studies and sips. His guest is Pascal Ribereau-Gayon, oenologist at the University of Bordeaux.

humility," he says, recalling many vintages where the wine ignored the predictions.
But Mr. Ribereau-Gayon's opinion is not unusual in this wine-obsessed region. The 1976's will equal 1975, say some experts. They will surpass them, say others. There are the inevitable—and pardonable—comparisons with truly great years: 1961, for example. But every year: 1961, for example usually someone trying to sell it—and line lovers look for less passionate judgments.

Pessimism in St. Emilion
Some skeptics note that the wine this year is short on acid. They predict a relatively short but illustrious life. Others whisper that some rain in September had a bad effect on the merlot, the grape most often used to soften the cabernet sauvignon, the principal grape of Bordeaux.

'Merlot roots don't go as deep as cabernet roots,' says Mr. Delmas, 'and when rain comes, as it did in September, merlot grapes swell up overnight.' A grape filled with water is no asset for a famous wine, but Mr. Delmas and others around here insist that the quality of the cabernet is so high that those merlot grapes picked too late—after the rain—cannot affect the quality of the wine.

In St. Emilion, where the merlot is king—some wines in St. Emilion have almost nothing else—growers such as Alain Quere at Chateau Mombouquet say quite emphatically that 1976 will not match the previous vintage.

Lack of Acid
Others, including Alexis Lichine, owner of Chateau Prieure-Lichine here, are worried that the lack of acid in the wine will shorten its life. The heat last summer produced a wine low on sugar but short on acid. Mr. Ribereau-Gayon insists there is nothing to the idea that low acid means a short life.

Some winemakers and shippers here, whose financial problems stemming from the drastic price break of a few years ago are in such bad condition that good harvests cannot help them. Almost everyone acknowledges that the wine business here will never be what it was in the late 1960's or even before, when the Bordeaux merchants were in control. But buoyed up by two excellent vintages, the people of the wine trade of the Gironde have begun to display cautious optimism.

'Anyone who has wine to sell can sell it,' said Philippe Cottin, the head of La Bergerie, the company that all the wines under the name of Rothschild name. 'The get the price they want,' said, 'but they can sell the years ago nothing sold here.'

If anything distinguishes vintage from previous years: good quality, it is the fact excellent all over France: growers—who are particularly to American wine consumers are Beaujolais lovers—are 1976 was their best vintage.

In Burgundy, the long produced wines with a best acid balance that beats Burgundies of yore. Both Pinots and the Côte de Beaune superb growing conditions anything unplanned, the is excellent.

Bridge: Tournament Directors Miss Many Opportunities to Play

By ALAN TRUSCOTT

Tournament directors have few opportunities to play but plenty of opportunities to observe high-level performers. As a result, their master-point totals do not reflect their ability and it may take them a long time to reach the rank of life master.

In a light-hearted mood, Linah introduced a psychic bid of one spade when his partner's opening bid of one diamond was doubled. This is an old idea, aimed at talking the opponents out of a likely spade contract.

Linah's partner was Dr. Louis Iacovo of West Covina, Calif. Not unnaturally, he raised to four spades when West did not choose to bid his clubs, and Linah had to suffer the consequences of his own frivolity.

East Wins With Ace: East was for some reason unable to read his partner's opening heart lead as a singleton. He won with the ace and carelessly returned the nine, neglecting the obvious necessity to play the queen and pin the remaining honor in the dummy.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 19 (UPI)—According to the Labor Department of poor record-keeping and reporting, the A.F.L.-C.I.O. said today that unemployment in construction trade unions was the worst since the Depression in many big cities.

Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations. A Panamanian Freighter, Loaded With Marijuana, Is Towed to Miami Base

MIAMI, Oct. 19 — A Panamanian freighter, loaded with more than 80 tons of marijuana, was towed 500 miles into the Coast Guard base here today.

The seizure was one of the largest ever made by a United States law enforcement agency, according to a spokesman for the Drug Enforcement Administration of Miami. The street value of the marijuana seized was estimated at close to $50 million, the spokesman said.

The 325-foot Don Emilio had been boarded and seized by the Coast Guard on the high seas last Friday. According to her manifest, the ship left the port of Cartagena in Columbia on Oct. 4 with a cargo of one million kilos of asbestos bound for St. John's, Newfoundland. The Don Emilio is owned by Compania Financiera Velrus, S.A., of Panama, according to the manifest.

Capt. H.W. Villette, commanding officer of the Coast Guard cutter Sherman, which spotted and later boarded the Don Emilio some 15 miles east of Eleuthera, the Bahamas, said today that the freighter was carrying about 82 tons of marijuana. There had been reports that 160 tons of the drug had been found aboard.

The Don Emilio was boarded, the Coast Guard said, "at the request of the Panamanian Government." Edgardo Lopez, consul general of Panama in Miami, confirmed today that the Panamanian Government had been instrumental in the boarding.

"The Maritime Bureau of Panama, which had information of a possible smuggling activity by Don Emilio, asked the Coast Guard for collaboration," Mr. Lopez said. "We have had information to suspect that it was not the first time that this freighter has been engaged in such activities. We also believe that Don Emilio might have been loaded with marijuana off the coast of Colombia. She is Panamanian only because of the flag of convenience."

Captain Villette said today that all 20 members of the freighter's crew were Colombians. Nineteen crew members, including the captain, Carlton Bent Hooker are being held as illegal aliens pending determination of legal jurisdiction in the case.

The 20th member of the crew is officially listed as missing at sea. He had apparently been used as an interpreter by the boarding party, but was locked in a room with the other members of the crew with a guard at the door.

He was last seen on Friday, when Don Emilio was being towed to Miami by the Sherman.

Life Imprisonment Is Asked In Trial of Two Palestinians

ISTANBUL, Oct. 19 (Reuters)—The prosecution today demanded life imprisonment, and not the death penalty as expected, for two Palestinians accused of murdering four El Al airline passengers in a guerrilla attack here last August.

The prosecutor made the demand at the start of the trial of Hussein Mohammed al-Rashid and Mehti Mohammed Zille, who came into court heavily guarded and singing marches.

The two are accused of murdering four people and injuring 22 by setting off bombs and indiscriminately firing automatic weapons in a departure hall at Istanbul Airport while passengers were waiting to board an El Al flight to Tel Aviv.

AN OPEN LETTER TO MEDICAL PROFESSIONALS FROM SOME OF YOUR CONTEMPORARIES

What does medical professionalism and Air Force medicine have to do with you? Spend just 80 seconds reading what your contemporaries in the Air Force really think about Air Force medicine...

"About a year ago, I decided I'd had it with the rocketing overhead for personnel, secretarial costs, accounting, legal fees, and office rental (up 300 percent in six years)..."

"Physicians entering the Air Force are now eligible to receive up to $13,500 in annual bonus. This could bring the salary of a physician joining the Air Force (on completion of residency) to over $31,000—without overhead..."

"Facilities are excellent. Recently, I spent nine weeks at the School of Aerospace Medicine at Brooks AFB in Texas, and I've never seen so magnificent a diagnostic and treatment setup anywhere..."

"The frustrations of running a business are out of the way..."

"My net now is about 30 percent below my civilian take-home level, but the trade-off is worth it. I'm finally getting acquainted with my kids..."

"And the benefits offered all Air Force members, such as an excellent retirement program, base exchange privileges, and (30 days) annual leave made the move to Air Force medicine even more attractive."

Interested comments aren't they? Maybe you saw yourself in some of those remarks. If you'd like to find out more about the opportunities for you in Air Force medicine, call or write us today.

Another Thousand Days

By CHRISTOPHER LEHMANN-HAUPT

BLIND AMBITION: The White House Years. By John W. Dean 3d. 415 pages. Illustrated. Simon & Schuster, $11.95.

No, John W. Dean 3d is not the most appealing person in the world, and yes, the subject of Watergate is getting a little tedious. So one feels not a little antsy as one begins reading "Blind Ambition: The White House Years" and watches Mr. Dean undertake the by-now-familiar confessional routine of explaining how he got his job in the Nixon White House—which was of course to be John D. Ehrlichman's successor as legal counsel to the President—and how he unsuccessfully resisted his first assignment—which was to "get" the owners of the erstwhile mock-magazine Scamian's Monthly for a derogatory article they ran in 1970 on Vice President Spiro T. Agnew. But one's restlessness does not last long. Before you know it, you are turning the pages of Mr. Dean's book as if you were reading about Watergate for the very first time. And by the time you have finished, you are convinced that no previous book about the scandal—not even those by Bob Woodward and Carl Bernstein—has begun to tell the inside story as this one does.

Why? I suppose one has to begin with the hard news revelations, since these are what all the advance publicity has been about. To be sure, they are by turns intriguing and outrageous. For instance, Mr. Dean, and Charles W. Colson too, believes that the Central Intelligence Agency and Howard R. Hughes are the keys to why the Democratic National Committee offices were broken into and bugged in the first place, which would confirm Norman Mailer's somewhat feverish speculations in a recent issue of New York magazine.

And for instance, when Mr. Dean last spoke to G. Gordon Liddy, on June 18, 1972, Mr. Liddy told Mr. Dean in all seriousness: "I'm prepared to accept responsibility for the trading of the break-in to the Committee to Re-elect the President. And if somebody wants to shoot me . . . on a street corner, I'm prepared to have that done. You just let me know when and where, and I'll be there."

But this is hardly headline stuff, and the stuff that has made headlines so far—such as the news that Richard M. Nixon mentioned in Mr. Dean's presence that "the typewriters are always the key—we built one in the Hiss case" or that William F. Himmels, chief of White House Liaison with Congress, told Mr. Dean that "uh, Jerry [Ford] himself might have some problem in this area [of campaign contributions]"—is hardly substantial enough for anyone to sink his teeth into.

No, the news of "Blind Ambition" is soft and relatively subtle. As Mr. Dean explains in an introductory note, he prepared for its writing "the same way I prepared to testify before the Ervin committee, before the special prosecutors, and in the cover-up trial. But in the book I have included dialogue and enclosed it in quotation marks, whereas in my testimony I deliberately restrained from dramatizing the events I was relating." And "I have included detail, texture, tone, to make this history more vivid—though, I trust, no prettier."

So what is fascinating about "Blind Ambition" are the details that can't be put into headlines. Background development: Mr. Dean rose so quickly to a position where he was the "linchpin" of the cover-up conspiracy because he deliberately set out to make of his office a "law firm" servicing everyone in the Administration. Comic scenes: In March 1972, Mr. Nixon asked, in a meeting with Mr. Dean, H. R. Haldeeman, Mr. Ehrlichman, and John D. Mitchell, why "we" were reconsidering "the idea of opening up Watergate, lancing the boil?" Because of "the lack of alternatives, or a body," Mr. Dean replied, "meaning that no one was willing to risk jail, alone or in company. The whole group broke up in laughter—this time not nervous, pressured laughter, but guffaws." And scene upon scene in which Mr. Dean comments on what was going on in his mind during the famous taped discussions with Mr. Nixon.

And one follows it all with mounting excitement not only because this is the first account of Watergate complete with "detail, texture" and "tone," but also because for the first time we have a single point of view—and that of a major figure in the scandal—with which we can identify.

How can one sympathize with John Dean, when, as he puts it somewhere in the book, "no one likes a squealer, a Judas, an informant, a tattletale, especially one who is also guilty"? More important, why should we believe him in the first place? It will take far more expert study than I can give it to say whether "Blind Ambition" is credible; I can only promise that it seems consistent with what most of us have heard about Watergate. But Mr. Dean handles the problems of his "tattling" and his guilt most effectively. He persuades us that he turned informer because he had to have done so and have meant getting both himself and the Nixon Administration far more deeply entangled in the cover-up than they had already become.

As for his guilt: He neither denies it nor makes love to it in the manner of one master he studied when he took on vacation with him Albert Speer's "Inside the Third Reich." He simply offers it up for our perusal: "For a thousand days I would serve as counsel to the President. I soon learned that to make my way upward, into a position of confidence and influence, I had to travel downward through factional power plays, corruption and finally outright crimes. . . . Slowly, steadily, I would climb toward the moral abyss of the President's inner circle until I finally fell into it, thinking I had made it to the top just as I began to realize I had actually touched bottom."

One would like to conclude that Mr. Dean's basic crime was an unusual one. But it is not.

The Case of the Captivated Critics

"The book is a real eye-opener on a super-sophisticated private investigator who makes the classic private eyes of Dashiell Hammett and Raymond Chandler look like bumbling amateurs."

—JOHN BARKHAM REVIEWS

"He talks a beautiful line of top-drawer private-eye tales, best of the season."

—KIRKUS REVIEWS

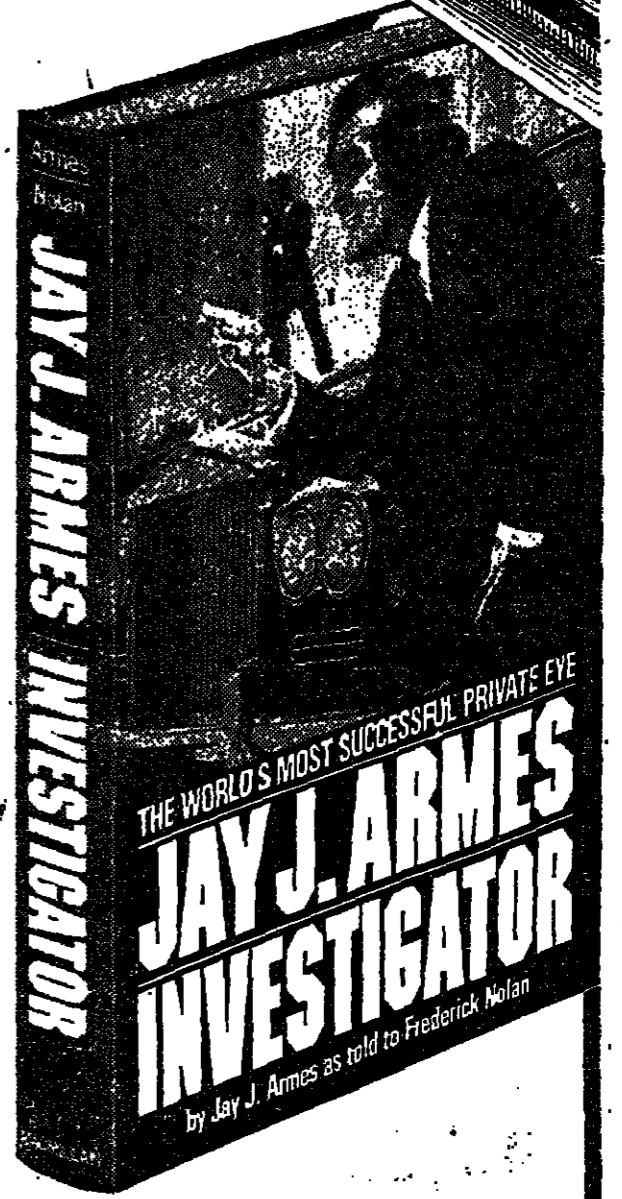

"Armes is a private-eye beside whom the doughty detectives of fiction pale into blandness. . . . The details of how cleverly he manipulates his 'hooks' are fascinating; his exploits are almost incredible."

—PUBLISHERS WEEKLY

"It's a helluva good read."

—DAN GREENBURG

Jay J. Armes. The world's most successful private eye. He works like Philip Marlowe. And lives like James Bond. He courts danger the way other men court women. He has hooks rather than hands. Victim of a childhood accident, he has turned a handicap into a source of inspiration for many. His lifestyle includes a sprawling mansion, 9 cars (including a $37,000 Rolls Royce), a private zoo and a clothes closet that looks like the showroom of Pierre Cardin. His personal story is filled with the excitement of a life lived to the hilt, and the drama of a man who tracks down kidnapers, murderers and rapists for a living.

She was the scandal of old Nantucket. She lived the 18th century as if it were the 20th.

Kezia Coffin was married young—and unhappily—to a rough, older whaling captain who didn't love her. Their wedding night was a disaster, and Kezia blamed herself. She decided that if they couldn't consummate their union through sex, they could do it through money. While her husband was at sea, she immersed herself in his business, and made a fortune at it. In time, she also discovered that she was not the sexless freak of nature her husband had led her to believe. And so, in full bloom and with great vigor, Kezia set forth to enjoy her womanhood among the handsome men of Nantucket, London and Philadelphia.

Night for All—From Fisher Hall to Yankee Stadium

New York is a city of Somebodies, and name-dropping is a local industry. But last night, a great one for taxi drivers, the town outdid itself, conveying resident and visiting celebrities to the Yankee Stadium and to Lincoln Center. In the Bronx highlands, the Somebodies shivered, either from the action or the weather, at the World Series. Downtown, the Somebodies sat prominently and starchily in formal dress for the acoustical opener at newly rebuilt Fisher Hall.

4 percent in the third, was reported by the Department of Commerce. Jimmy Carter said the new figures showed a backsliding recovery that could come to a stop, while Ford Administration spokesmen emphasized an improved inflation picture in the quarter just reported. [1:6.]

The national public school census by race, sex and other factors to assess the progress of integration, mandated since 1964, will not take place this year. The Federal Office of Management and Budget has explained that the enforcement arm of the Department of Health, Education and Welfare has already taken on more reviews of local, civil rights compliance, than it can handle, and that the proposed survey would be an excessive burden on local school officials. [13:1-6.]

Jimmy Carter was in Harlem for the first of three appearances in New York City aimed at shoring up traditional Democratic strength among blacks, Roman Catholics and Jews. "I need you" was his message to a chilled but enthusiastic street-corner crowd. He will address the Alfred E. Smith Dinner tomorrow and appear at a garment district rally next Wednesday. [12-4.]

President Ford thrust at Jimmy Carter on defense policy by saying that those who preach cutting the defense budget by billions do not understand the armed forces' role as a bulwark of freedom throughout the world. He told a veterans' group at the White House that public support for the armed forces had swung back since the contentious days of involvement in Vietnam. [28:5-6.]

The new Avery Fisher Hall opened officially with a Pension Fund Concert of the New York Philharmonic and general happiness at acoustics infinitely superior to those of the former hall, which was extensively rebuilt. It has a "modern" sound with single instruments standing out in high relief. The bass is a little weak but it sounds much better than in the old Philharmonic Hall. [1:1.]

The Reds won, 6-2, at Yankee Stadium and lead New York 3-0 in the World Series. The Cincinnati visitors scored first and held their lead throughout. [12-4.]

Ethnic and religious charges were exchanged following a move by the Beane administration to give the affiliation contract for the city's newly built Lincoln Hospital to Misericordia Hospital, operated by Catholic Charities, supplanting Albert Einstein Medical College, which receives aid from Jewish philanthropy. The contract is worth millions of dollars. [1:1.]

An accidental waterfall prevented thousands from entering or leaving the North Tower of the World Trade Center for three hours during and after the lunch hour. A clogged pump for a new plaza fountain was blamed. Some office workers said pedestrian traffic congestion was unbearable in the building at lunchtime even with the passageway open. [12:2-6.]

Business/Finance

September gains in housing starts reached the highest level since February 1974, the Department of Commerce said. The seasonally adjusted figure for new units started gave an annual rate of 1.81 million, up 17.6 percent over August. The surge was strongest in the apartment sector, an increase attributed to Federal distribution of money and commitments for low-income housing. [87:5-6.]

Third-quarter banking gains were reported by the Chase Manhattan Corp., with a 15.7 percent increase over the 1975 quarter, and the Continental Illinois Corp., with 11.5 percent. With reports already in from the eight of the 10 largest bank holding companies, the group so far has a 12.4 percent gain, the first turnaround in year-to-year earnings after four quarters of declines. [88:3-4.]

The Dow Jones industrial average, after dropping more than 4 points in the morning session, moved up for a gain for the day of 3.41 points, closing at 939.97. [67:6.] Bond prices dropped and a new Bell System $175 million issue marked a yield of 8.25 percent. Soybean futures rallied, but corn and wheat

Liberals in Canada Lose By-Elections; French Is an Issue

By ROBERT TRUMBULL
Special to The New York Times
OTTAWA, Oct. 19—The governing Liberal Party has been jolted by sharp defeats in two by-elections apparently mainly as a result of its controversial language and economic policies.
Progressive Conservatives won yesterday in the one-time "safe" constituency of Ottawa Carlton, embracing part of the national capital and an adjacent municipality, and in St. John's, the capital of Newfoundland.
Prime Minister Pierre Elliott Trudeau's Liberal Party set the stage for still another significant test of the uncertain Canadian political climate by scheduling an election for Nov. 15 in the French-speaking province, the country's largest.
In Quebec, as in the two elections yesterday, the Trudeau move to give French an equal status with English and his widely attacked wage-and-price controls are expected to be key issues.
In Ottawa Carlton, the Liberals were overwhelmingly defeated yesterday in an area where the party had been dominant for the last 94 years.
The last occupant of the Ottawa Carlton seat had been Mr. Trudeau's popular former Finance Minister, John N. Turner, a successful lawyer, had been mentioned often as a likely successor to Mr. Trudeau before he broke with the Prime Minister and resigned from Parliament over a difference in economic policy last year.
Mr. Turner had won the seat by a majority of nearly 11,000 votes in the last election in 1974. The Progressive Conservative candidate, Mrs. Jean Pigott, won yesterday by taking 51 percent of the vote.
In St. John's, where the Progressive Conservatives and the Liberals have traditionally run virtually neck-and-neck, Mr. Trudeau's Party slipped to a poor third behind the New Democrats, a Socialist group. The seat was won by John Crosbie, a prominent Progressive Conservative.

corresponded with the party's upsurge in recent opinion polls, which showed the Liberals trailing by 33 percent to 45 percent—the lowest point for the Liberals in many years. The Gallup Poll published last Saturday placed the 37-year-old Conservative leader, Joseph Clark, ahead of Mr. Trudeau for the first time by 36 percent to 28 percent.
Mr. Trudeau, whose Government is entitled to stay in office until 1979, declared in a brief statement to reporters that he regarded the adverse vote as a "warning." However, he indicated that there would be no drastic policy changes as a result.
"Obviously, the people are trying to convey a message to the Government and we'll try and take that message," said Mr. Trudeau, who left a few hours later on an official visit to Japan.
He added that while "by-elections are warning signs to a Government they don't settle national issues."

When someone comes into my store he's not gang tacked. If you want to just browse for an hour, fine with me. If you want somebody to wait on you, that's fine, too. I'll answer any questions you have about a camera.
I'll even take it out of the box for you, unwrap the camera, put on a lens and install the batteries. Now who else does that? At Hirsch Photo I believe before you buy a camera you should work with it. I don't pressure people either. So if it's a Canon F-1 or EF, or a FTbn, I'll help you decide which is right for you. And after all that, if you don't buy it then that's okay, too. I know someday you'll be back—because nobody else gives you that kind of service.
And nobody else gives you the kind of prices I do. Practically half my customers are professionals. They come with more cameras around their necks than I have in my store. You can't fool those guys. They know what a good deal is.
So that's it. Great service and great prices. These days it's a hard philosophy to always live up to, but I really have no complaints. And neither do my customers.

who spent the afternoon a Flying Dutchman," one ductions, remarked, "It's such a vast relief to know that we are still alive."

Members of the orchestra said that they and most of their colleagues were happy with the settlement, reached last Friday, and glad to be back. Commenting on a closeness among members of the company, Jerry Gibson, a violinist, said, "It was almost like striking against the family."

Was anyone sorry to be back? "I tell you, I'm in this business so long it doesn't matter anymore," said Otto Frohm, a violinist, as he played canasta in a musicians lounge before going into the orchestra pit. "It's nice not to work but you miss your friends. It's nice not to work and to work."

Lack of Income

What was not so nice, of course, was the lack of income, and many of the artists started trying to line up engagements in case the company season did end—a particularly difficult project for singers because work is booked so far in advance.

But musicians found things to do that normally are precluded by six weekly performances plus rehearsals. Howard Hensel, who sang Orestes, painted his whole apartment and wallpapered the bathroom. In fact, he said, "I met four other people from the opera in the paint store." Erich Silberstein, violist, found time to play chamber music. David Halloway, who sang Agamemnon, became a father.

Wind Suppresses a Fire

LINDEN, N.J., Oct. 19 (UPI)—Fire officials say a strong wind prevented a holocaust when a fuel truck overturned and caught fire near two oil refineries. The fire engulfed 500 feet of grassland along the highway this afternoon, but wind gusts of 25 miles an hour blew the flames away from the direction of the Citgo Oil Company and the British Petroleum Company refineries. The refineries are adjacent to the highway.

... of Policemen Allowed to Plead to Lesser Charge, Avoiding Death

By DENA KLEIMAN
 Recommendation of the Manhattan District Attorney, Justice Burton of the State Supreme Court allowed a policeman to plead guilty yesterday to the murder of two City policemen rather than a second-degree murder charge. The plea was accepted by Justice Burton, who admitted two officers on a street corner East Side in 1975, now a maximum sentence of life in prison for parole after 25 years.

parent turnout yesterday by saying that he had been misunderstood. Reports of the District Attorney's plan to allow Mr. Velez to plead guilty to second-degree murder rather than murder in the first degree brought criticism from the widows of the two slain policemen as well as from Senator James L. Buckley. The Senator charged that it was "an affront to every policeman, every wife of a policeman and every widow of an officer slain in the line of duty."

viewed by the Court of Appeals, the state's highest court, in a case involving the slaying of a police officer in Westchester County. It also could play a role in the sentencing of Joseph Velez, convicted of killing an off-duty police officer in a bank robbery in January 1975. Mr. Velez is scheduled to face Justice Peter J. McQuillan of State Supreme Court. In its decision, the Supreme Court upheld the death penalty, but ruled that in some states its application was unconstitutional. Specifically, it ruled that the statute in North Carolina was unconstitutional because it mandated the death penalty for particular crimes and did not allow for "juror discretion" in its imposition. Some legal authorities have argued that because New York's law is similar in some respects to that of North Carolina, it, too, will eventually be ruled unconstitutional. "The court truly wept, through many sleepless nights deciding this case," Justice Roberts said at a two-hour hearing, during which Mr. Velez repeatedly laughed when the judge spoke of the crime.

"If there were ever reason for a person to be electrocuted for a crime," the justice said, "this would be the kind of case, but considering the circumstances it is in the public's interest to accept the plea." Mr. Velez, who remained standing through most of the hearing with his arms folded over his chest, told Justice Roberts that he had shot the officers in self-defense after they had called him racist names. When Mr. Velez was asked on why he was accepting the plea, for which Justice Roberts pointed out that Mr. Velez was receiving "nothing in return" and would probably get life in prison with the recommendation that he never be paroled, Mr. Velez replied that he was not afraid of death, but that he had "personal reasons" for accepting the lesser plea. He refused to say what they were. Mr. Velez, 27 years old, had also been a suspect in the slaying of Alexander Loren, 53, a furrier who was shot to death during a robbery attempt in his midtown shop the same month the officers were killed.

Bold Forbes Is Victor In His Return to Racing

By MICHAEL STRAUSS
Bold Forbes, the Kentucky Derby and Belmont Stakes winner, who had been sidelined for four months with a leg injury, yesterday stirred a crowd of 11,672 with an impressive triumph in his comeback effort at Belmont Park.

He will really show to his best only after he's had more racing."
Barrera is of the same opinion. "I'm very pleased by what our colt did today," said the Cuban-born trainer.

The 3-year-old son of Irish Castle scored in the six-furlong $30,000 Stromboli race against five rivals. He was clocked in the fast time of 1:09 4/5 in beating Meadowhill's Quiet Little Table to the wire by 1 1/2 lengths.

In the barn area attention began focusing on next Saturday's $300,000 added Jockey Club Gold Cup. Giant-killer Allen Jerkens had last year's winner of the 1 1/4-mile classic, Group Plan, working 1 1/4 miles in 2:06.

Bold Forbes, ridden by Angel Cordero Jr., leading the field to the finish in the $30,000 Stromboli purse at Belmont Park yesterday.

For proof that Gulfstream planned to keep the track open in Hialeah, a bill that failed in the Florida Legislature last spring would have allowed closing Hialeah, located in Dade County, and moving the track's operations to Gulfstream, in neighboring Broward County.

OTB Is Adding Glamour At New Broadway Office

A lush, carpeted off-track betting parlor will open in four months at 42d Street and Broadway with the expectation that it will increase the handle and improve OTB's image.
Paul Scrvane, head of OTB, said yesterday that the new parlor would be OTB's "showcase."

Under the rules change, track bettors are authorized to set up computer systems in which bettors' money and then bet against the track by coding their bet into a card and inserting a plastic card into a credit card.

A Theatrical Departure
Scrvane said, "It won't be antiseptic and will be the first OTB parlor that will depart from our prosaic conventional green and white decor. It will be a show-biz kind of thing."

Chase Manhattan Net Up 15.7%;
Continental Illinois Rises by 11.5%

The Chase Manhattan Corporation, the nation's third largest bank holding company, reported yesterday a 15.7 percent increase in third-quarter operating earnings over the severely depressed year-earlier quarter.

Gimbel Brothers, one of New York's oldest retailers and the only one with two major Manhattan stores, is striving to end its seven-year earnings drought with a return to profitability next year.

September Housing Starts
Are Highest in 2 1/2 Years

Rise Tops Previous
Month by 17.6%—
Apartments Surge

WASHINGTON, Oct. 19 (AP) — The number of new housing units started in September reached the highest level in two and a half years, the Government reported today.

It was the best month for new housing units since 1.88 million were reported in February 1974.

The report signaled that activity in the housing industry, which until now had been one of the weak spots in the economy, had picked up substantially.

The Commerce Department put the number of units started in September after adjustment for seasonal variations at an annual rate of 1.81 million. That was an advance of 17.6 percent over August.

The increase followed an 11.6 percent advance in August and left housing starts 39.1 percent ahead of the similar month a year ago.

Building Permits Climb
The number of new building permits issued, an indicator of future activity in the industry, was up for the third consecutive month to a seasonally adjusted annual rate of 1.43 million.

The Commerce Department put the number of units started in September after adjustment for seasonal variations at an annual rate of 1.81 million. That was an advance of 17.6 percent over August.

President Ford said he was "extremely pleased" by the report that housing starts and new home sales had been showing an increase.

"This is excellent news for the construction industry, and illustrates the increasing confidence of builders and home buyers."

In a related report, the Federal Home Loan Bank Board said rates on home loans advanced for the third straight month on the strength of heavy demand for mortgage money.

The bank board said the average effective rate on loans for new houses was 9.08 percent in September, up from 9.02 percent the previous month.

The average purchase price of a new home climbed $500 to $50,500. The average purchase price of an existing home climbed $500 to $43,300.

Strength in Apartment Sector
Much of the strength for the advance came in the apartment sector, where starts climbed by 48.2 percent to an annual rate of 415,000 units.

The surge in the apartment sector was attributed to the Federal Government's distribution of money and commitments for low-income housing.

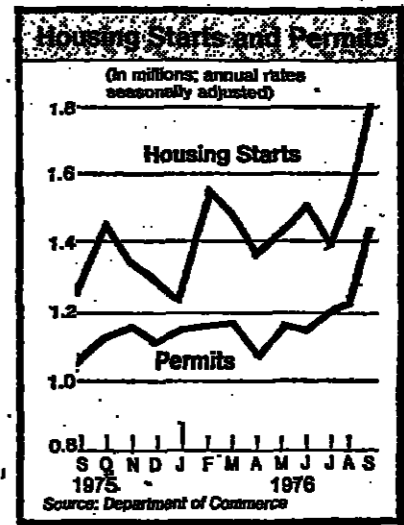

Michael Sumichrast, chief economist for the National Association of Home Builders, said Federal involvement should keep the multifamily sector healthy for at least six to 10 months.

What was more surprising, he said, was the 9.4 percent advance in starts on single-family dwellings, pushing the number of housing starts to 1.295 million at an annual rate.

Mr. Sumichrast said that was the strongest September showing for single-family construction ever, with the exception of 1972. In that year, heavy Federal subsidies for single-family homes helped push starts in that sector to 1.5 million.

The heavy increase in building activity contributed to the sharp drop in unemployment in the construction industry in September. The rate fell from 17.1 percent to 15.8 percent. That compares to an unemployment rate of 7.8 percent in the economy generally.

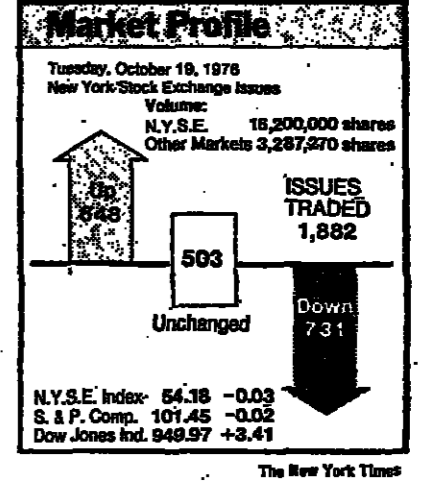

At the same time, the Manufactured Housing Institute, which produces what used to be called mobile homes or trailers, said their shipments in September rose 11 percent over the same month a year ago, hitting a seasonally-adjusted annual rate of 252,000 units.

By VARTANIG G. VARTAN
A Government report showing a pickup in housing starts in September transformed a losing market session into a winner yesterday as measured by the Dow Jones industrial average.

At the opening bell, the Commerce Department said that the Gross National Product, stripped of inflation, rose at an annual rate of 4 percent in the third quarter.

The Commerce Department released its good news in midafternoon with the announcement that housing starts last month ran 17.6 percent ahead of the August rate and 39.1 percent above the September 1975 level.

The latest quarterly slowdown was not expected, but its confirmation did nothing to soothe investors whose current fears range from the economy to prospects of a Jimmy Carter Presidential victory in November and possible oil-price increases in December by Middle East producing nations.

Gimbel Is Aiming for Profits With Changes
The big push in the company's new approach is to erase "our inconsistent image" and seek "a middle-price, middle-of-the-road" appeal to attract the broad range of consumers in the metropolitan area, said Mr. Kallman, a 48-year-old career merchant.
"Concentrate on What We Are"
"We don't feel we have to be the biggest retailer to do a better job," he added. "What we want to do is to concentrate on what we are and what our customers want."
But in New York's tough retail market, probably the most competitive in the country, Mr. Kallman conceded that the need to draw customer attention forces stores to compete strongly. "We are going to do it, though, with consistency in merchandise, pricing and décor," he said, "so that customers know what we are."
The Gimbel's New York group, a division of Gimbel Brothers Inc., which is in turn owned by the Brown and Williamson Tobacco Company, expects to continue to run at a loss this year, he said.
But although deficits are mostly due to "systems" problems in our credit and accounting procedures," changes in the mix of merchandise are expected to speed the return of profits in the next fiscal year beginning Feb. 1, 1977, he said.
The average sales transaction is already "moderately" up, Mr. Kallman added.
The systems problems arise from the existence of both manual and computerized operations that have led to duplication, he said, and, therefore, "a strain on our profits." The integration of the conflicting systems in a single computerized program is being supervised by James Connolly, a former vice president and treasurer of Blooming-

Professor Says U.S. Failed on Energy Problems

Professor Charles Issawi of Princeton University charged yesterday that the United States had "failed the lamentable task of solving its energy problems since the 1973 Arab oil embargo. The professor of Near Eastern Studies at Princeton said that the President's Congress seemed to have a "table of the tortoise and the hare" got it backwards. "I am under the impression that the tortoise is that we want to sleep with the race," he said. Issawi's speech was consistent with the views of most of the 60 energy analysts and staffers gathered from all over the United States at the University of Colorado's annual International Conference on Energy and Development. Issawi, a Middle East expert, called for a fundamental re-orientation of American priorities and attitudes. He said, "At all times we must be prepared to pay the cost required."

Indispensable and huge sums would go on accruing to the producing countries. He remarked, "The world may roll-and the world may boil-but it can't do without Mideast Oil." The Manufacturers Hanover Trust Company, the fourth largest bank in the country, announced yesterday a new organization of its banking operations in metropolitan New York. As part of the reorganization several young executives were promoted as heads of new divisions and some informed observers saw in the new faces some that might eventually rise to top positions. Under the new organization, the bank's Metropolitan division, made up of 208 branches with 5,100 staff members, will be split into two separate departments. The management changes connected with the reorganization were the promotion of John R. Torell III, to succeed Phillip H. Miller as officer in charge of the Metropolitan division. Mr. Torell, 37 years old, who rose from management trainee to his present post in 15 years; was also pro-local business accounts and consumer banking. Edward A. Farley, 52 years old, who joined the bank in 1951 as a credit trainee, was promoted to senior vice president and put in charge of the new corporate banking group, which will be responsible for multinational and national accounts and bigger local industries. Douglas E. Ebert, 30 years old, who joined the bank in 1958, was promoted to senior vice president and put in charge of the new branch banking group, which will be responsible for

LOS ANGELES, Oct. 19 (UPI)—Continental Airlines pilots will go on strike Saturday if they cannot reach agreement with management on a new contract. The Airline Pilots Association, representing the 1,100 Continental pilots, announced the 12:01 A.M. strike deadline yesterday. No bargaining talks have been scheduled. Offers to Purchase All Outstanding Stock for Cash at $19 a Share, or a Total Value of $18.9 Million

By HERBERT KOSBETZ
Houdaille Industries announced in Buffalo yesterday that it was offering to buy all the outstanding common shares of the Fort Worth Steel and Machinery Company at a cash price of $19 a share. Houdaille said that all shares tendered until 5 P.M. Dallas time and 6 P.M. New York time on Nov. 1 would be purchased. If all of the 965,335 outstanding shares are tendered, Houdaille would expend $18.9 million.

However, under the offer, Houdaille said it was obligated to buy only stock tendered if it received 170,592 shares, or about 17.6 percent, of the outstanding shares. Together with the 313,676 shares already contracted for, Houdaille would have slightly more than 50 percent of all shares. According to J. I. Jackson, chairman of Fort Worth Steel, the offer was unanimously approved by his board whose members, together with certain other shareholders, have agreed to sell a total of 313,676, or about 33 percent of the outstanding shares. Fort Worth Steel manufactures power-transmission equipment, bulk-materials handling equipment, pneumatic conveying and ventilating systems and specialized machinery for vegetable-oil mills. It reported $1.9 million net in 1975 on sales of $14.36 million. Houdaille, a diversified company dealing with industrial products, machine tools and automotive parts, had sales

Ohio to Vote on Charter Changes That Could Alter Power Utilities

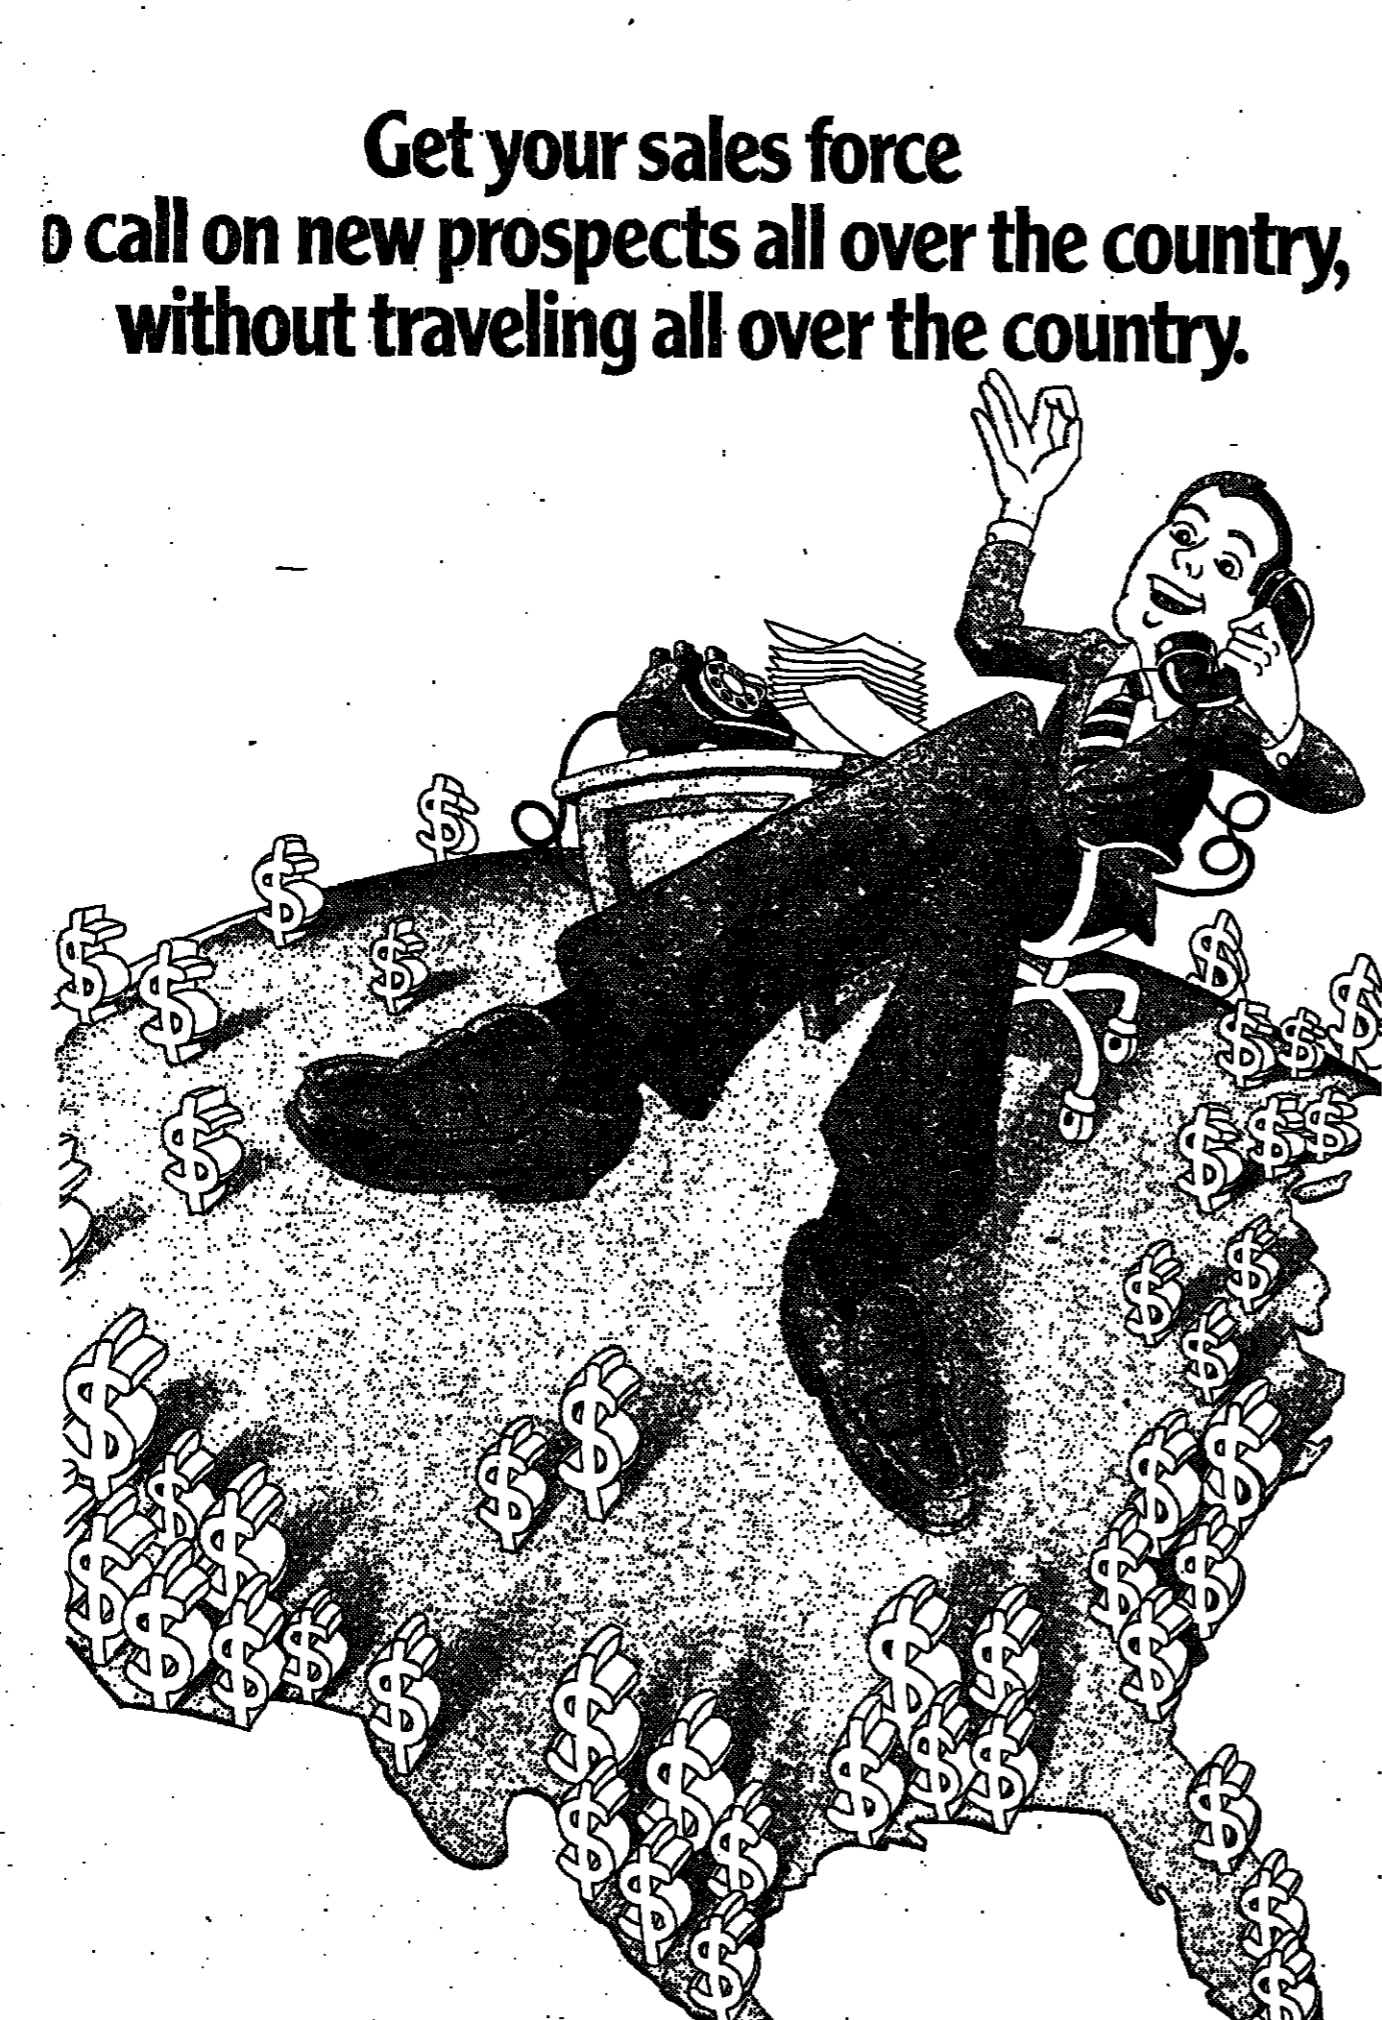

By REGINALD STUART
Special to The New York Times

COLUMBUS, Ohio Oct. 19—Four proposed constitutional amendments that could significantly change the operation of electric and natural-gas power utilities in this state and elsewhere have been placed on the November ballot. Voters will be presented with four highly controversial proposals that have been widely debated here and in other states faced with rising utility bills and fuel price increases. The proposals would establish tighter state regulation over the construction and operation of nuclear power plants as well as life-line rates that set a fixed amount that a customer can be charged for the use of power up to a certain amount and a consumer-supported fund to pay for legal counsel to represent customers at utility regulatory commission proceedings. The fourth amendment would make it easier to get a referendum question and amendment proposal on the ballot by lowering the required number of signatures. Although a number of states have debated the issues, this is the first time voters will have a chance to act as a group. California voters rejected 2 to 1 a much more stringent nuclear safeguard proposal in June, but that state's legislature enacted a softer measure just days before the vote. The California Public Utilities Commission also ordered the implementation of life-line rates by some utilities. "Here in Ohio, it became very difficult for people outside Columbus to deal with the legislature so the initiative process became the way the people outside the capital could have a major influence on energy policies," said Steven Sturrott of Vote Yes For Lower Utilities, the coalition of groups throughout the state working for adoption of the measures. The consumer groups gathered roughly half a million signatures on petitions to get their issues on the ballot next month. They say that by the end of their campaign they would have spent about $20,000 cash plus a vast amount of free help. In comparison, Citizens for Safe, Lower Cost Electricity, the utility industry campaign group, say they will have spent at least $1 million.

At Memphis, Cargill Inc., the large grain company, is unable to bring fully loaded barges to its dock at President's Island. The barges are being partly un- loaded onto trucks at a dock a mile and a half away to reduce draft and keep them from scraping bottom.

The American Waterways Operators, the trade association of the barge lines, is beginning a study on the economic impact of the problem. The findings will not be known for some time, a spokesman said.

The main problem is in the lower Mississippi River from Alton, Ill., to New Orleans. The Ohio and Missouri Rivers have plenty of water.

A storm in the Northeast a few days ago caused a substantial rise in the Ohio in recent days. A Corps spokes- man said the rise would temporarily relieve the barge operators' problems below Cairo, Ill., but could cause greater problems later. If the rise is followed by a rapid fall—as seems likely—more sediment than usual will be deposited in the channel.

Soybeans Climb Sharply On Substantial Demand For Meal, Up $4 a Ton

By ELIZABETH M. FOWLER

Soybean futures prices advanced sharply yesterday on the Chicago Board of Trade. The November contract, which closed at $6.24 1/2 a bushel, was as high as $6.25, compared with its Monday close of $6.06.

One analyst attributed the rise partly to substantial futures buying of soybean meal by European interests. The meal is used as animal feed and has been in strong demand all year from Europe. The meal closed at $175 a ton, up $4 a ton, and its strength lent support to soybeans, which attracted buying interest from commercial bean users as well as speculators.

"It seemed like a positive day for the beans, but it is not necessarily an indication of a turnaround," an analyst commented. In July, the November contract sold at $7.77 a bushel.

The rally did not include corn and wheat. December corn managed to gain less than 2 cents a bushel to close at $2.65 1/2. Exports have been strong recently and rain over harvest areas, as well as some snow, has prevented much farmer harvest selling, which tends to weaken prices.

Wheat Shows Little Change

Despite a report that Egypt had negotiated with the United States Government for a substantial amount of wheat, prices showed little change. The December contract closed at $2.91 1/2, up about 2 cents a bushel. Analysts pointed out that the wheat supply was large and that the Egyptian deal involved a Public Loan 480 commitment, meaning long-term, low-interest credit arrangements for the wheat.

Once again cocoa futures hit a peak, climbing to $1.25 a pound in terms of the December contract on the New York Cocoa Exchange. At the close the price was $1.24 7/10, up almost a cent a pound. Buying by speculators continued to dominate the market.

During the session prices moved lower temporarily following a report of the Ghana weekly purchase figure. This figure issued by the Ghana central marketing agency covers the tonnage of cocoa beans bought by the agency from farmers. The figure for last week was reported at 16,783 tons, bringing the total for the first two weeks of the current marketing season to 39,380 tons, somewhat higher than the 35,212 tons purchased in the year-earlier period.

Technology: Satellite Allows Way Educational Broadcasts

By VICTOR K. MCELHENY

Quebec, and between Indians in northern Alberta and a service organization in the provincial capital of Edmonton.

During 45-day periods around March 21 and Sept. 21, the satellite's solar power supply becomes less reliable when the craft is in darkness for up to 90 minutes daily. Experiments are halted during these "eclipse" periods, the latest of which has just ended.

Both Americans and Canadians are testing small ground antennas, including some only two feet across, from the Japanese broadcast entity, Nippon Hoso Kyokai.

The N.H.K. tests have attracted interest because the organization is buying from the General Electric Company's space systems department in Bala Cynwyd, Pa., a satellite for direct television broadcasting to such small antennas all over Japan. The satellite is to be launched early in 1978.

A factor in the ability of Hermes to broadcast to such small antennas is its use of the frequency band between 11 billion and 14 billion cycles per second, far higher than the 4-6 billion-cycle band used by standard communications satellites. Use of the higher band, assigned to communications satellites in 1971, is expected to become widespread in the 1980s—and to reduce potential electronic "crowding" or interference among satellites dotted along the equator.

way educational broadcasting communications satellites in space, widely scattered classrooms took a long step forward this at Stanford University in California and at Carleton University in Ottawa, Canada, began attending to each other's engineering by means of a Canadian communications satellite called Hermes.

Hermes is stationed in orbit above the Pacific, at 118 degrees longitude. Its equipment for direct television broadcasting is expected to be deployed in the nineteenth-century, particularly in developing nations, that lack extensive terrestrial communications networks but seek to improve the technical skills of farmers and others.

A 100-pound Hermes, light for a communications satellite, is powered by arrays of electricity-generating solar cells that kept pointing constantly at the sun.

is equipped with the most powerful transmitter yet carried by a communications satellite, a 200-watt transmitter. Funds from the National Aeronautics and Space Administration and many of the electronic tube division industries in Redwood City, of the $60-million Hermes, was supplied by Spar Products Ltd. of Toronto, also by a Delta rocket at a cost of $11 million.

far less than the $24 million Titan 3-C rocket that is scheduled for the heavier A.T.S. for educational broadcasts to America and later to India.

launching, the Canadian Communications Satellite, is being researched by the Canadian Department of Communications, whose Communications Research Laboratory in Ottawa handles Hermes and controls its transmissions.

States and Canadian research and Canadian research alternate days. The craft is scheduled to establish communications with medical libraries, schools of the Westinghouse Electric, widely separated communities at Zemon, Saskatchewan, and Bala St. Paul,

Competition Is Intense On Solar Research Unit

One of the most intense competitions for a United States Government research facility concerns the projected Solar Energy Research Institute, even though its projected size has been scaled down sharply from an originally planned annual budget of $50 million at the end of three years and site selection has been delayed past the original target of last spring.

A total of 20 organizations from New England to California, many with state government sponsorship, filed proposals for the center. Last week, 19 of the 20 were told of an additional postponement on site selection until March at the earliest, and one proponent from Las Cruces, N.M., was eliminated.

Meanwhile, the Energy Research and Development Administration has announced modest recent progress in developing solar technology. In September, the agency ordered silicon solar cells sufficient to produce 180 kilowatts of electrical power. One square foot of such cells converts incoming solar energy into 10 watts of electricity, with a conversion efficiency of about 10 to 15 percent.

The average September order price of the cells was $15.50 per watt of output, $5.50 lower than the price only six months ago, but still far above the target of 50 cents per watt that ERDA seeks by 1986. In that year, ERDA anticipates a total production of 500,000 kilowatts from solar cells. That amount of power would require 50 million square feet of cells.

The target price of 50 cents could put an array of solar cells within reach of some home-owners.

Meanwhile, ERDA announced, scientists at the University of Delaware under Dr. John D. Meakin, had improved the energy conversion efficiency of so-called thin-film solar cells from below 7 percent to nearly 8 percent. The films are made from cadmium sulfide and copper sulfide, whose cost is below that of silicon.

Much of the solar-cell improvement work is handled for ERDA through the Jet Propulsion Laboratory in Pasadena, Calif., from which the automated Viking missions on and around Mars are controlled.

G.N.P. GROWTH RATE SLOWS TO 4% LEVEL

of 1976, but this was widely regarded as unsustainable.

Although the quarterly gain announced today was the sixth in a row, it did leave Mr. Carter a new opening to attack the Administration's policy of encouraging a measured recovery.

John Kendrick, the Commerce Department's chief economist, said today that 4 percent growth was required to keep up with the normal growth in the labor force, adding: "We'll need somewhat stronger increases to whittle down unemployment."

Mr. Kendrick nevertheless maintained that the business expansion would not abort, as some had feared, and would resume faster growth at a 6 percent rate in the current quarter. This would bring the gain for the year as a whole to about 6 1/2 percent.

"We're continuing to get recovery," Mr. Kendrick said. "There are not enough negative signs to suggest there is an end anywhere in sight."

Statement Issued by Carter

Mr. Carter, in a statement released by his Atlanta headquarters, said: "After seeing had economic indicators for over a month, we now have proof that the economy is in a downward slide." He added that this implied "a continuation of high unemployment, huge budget deficits and poor prospects for an improvement in the standard of living of the average worker."

The reference to other economic measures presumably was to the index of leading indicators (a sharp decline at latest report), wholesale prices (a sharp increase), industrial production (unchanged) and unemployment (a decline, but by the slimmest amount possible).

Tilford C. Gaines, chief economist of the Manufacturers Hanover Trust Company, said today in a telephone interview that President Ford's position would be severely jeopardized if the release of the Consumer Price Index on Thursday failed to show a significant decline for September. The index is the last major economic indicator scheduled for release before the election.

"What he needs now is a C.P.I. number that will confirm that he has had the right policy," Mr. Gaines said.

Manufacturers Hanover has had perhaps the least optimistic estimates for the third-quarter G.N.P., 2.6 percent, but it also expects inflation to be cut to 4 percent or less for September from the 6 percent that has prevailed much of this year.

Mr. Gaines predicted that today's preliminary G.N.P. figure would be revised downward.

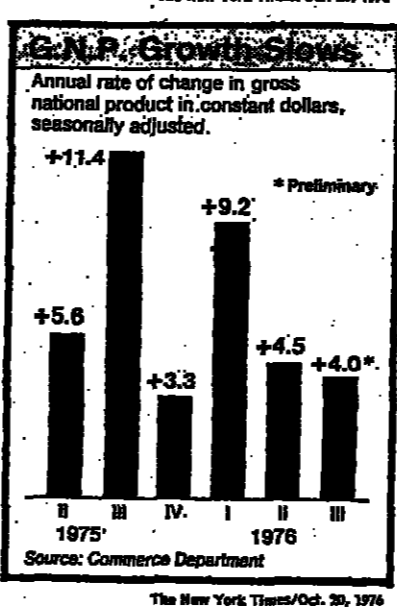

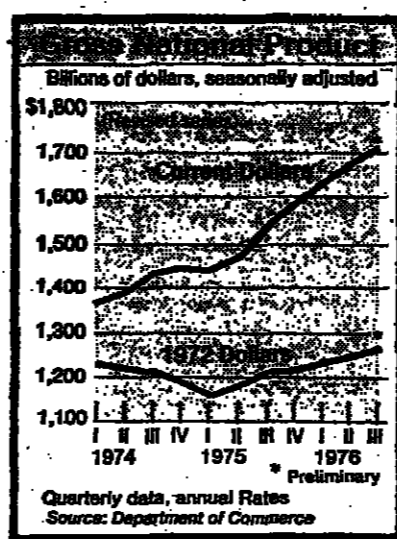

The inflation component of today's G.N.P. data, measured by the so-called "deflator," showed that the increase in the cost of living eased to 4.4 percent in the third quarter from 5.2 percent in the second quarter.

Real Final Sales Up by 4 1/4%

In explaining the G.N.P. figures, the Commerce Department noted that all the economic "deceleration" reflected a reduction in the rate at which businesses accumulated inventories. Real final sales rose by 4.4 percent, somewhat more than in the first half of this year.

Although it is not unusual for rates of growth to slow—or even turn briefly negative—during the second year of an economic recovery, some economists believe the Federal Reserve has been responding to a bleaker reassessment of the economic outlook in moving to ease credit during the last couple of weeks.

Measured in 1972 dollars, the G.N.P. was at a seasonally adjusted annual rate of $1,270 billion during the third quarter, up from $1,260 billion in the second quarter. Without adjusting for inflation, the first nine months trailed the year-ago level by 8.97 percent, but sales were up 2.1 percent.

Another major metals and mining company, Amax Inc., reported gains of 27.9 percent in third-quarter net income and 35.9 percent in sales.

The report placed net income at $37.6 million, or $1.08 a share, against $39.4 million, or 88 cents a share, in the like 1975 period. Sales rose to $303.7 million from $218.6 million in the three months ended Sept. 30, 1975.

The company pointed out that molybdenum and petroleum earnings were higher because of increased shipments and prices and improved base metals earnings. However, these gains were partially offset by lower coal earnings as a result of work stoppages and higher operating costs.

Help yourself to smaller taxes

Thousands of investors do it every year.

By selling stocks at losses that can be offset against ordinary income or capital gains.

By selling stocks to establish losses and buying others that might offer more investment potential.

We don't know just which securities you hold in your own portfolio, of course.

But our Research Department has just prepared a pamphlet called, "Tax Switches for '76" that could help you cut this year's taxes—and bring you much closer to your own investment objectives.

In it you'll find 60 widely held stocks carefully paired for your own purposes.

Both pairings match carefully selected stocks by comparable quality, prices, yields and prospects. Stocks you can switch in a way that benefits you most without disturbing the balance or potential of your own portfolio.

MOMENTUM

You can't build it into a game plan—or a marketing plan, for that matter. But momentum can mean everything when it comes to moving the ball or a product. And the alert quarterback or media planner knows how to take advantage of it.

SI closed out the third quarter of this year up 16% in advertising revenues. And our second issue of the fourth quarter (October 11) set an all-time single-issue record of $3 million worth of advertising.

That's momentum. The kind you can put to work for your product by running your ads where the best action in magazines is...

Supermarket Computerization Studied

By PHILIP H. DOUGHERTY
Slowly and, it is hoped, surely the Advertising Research Foundation is moving ahead with its plans for Project Payout. Intended to discover the exact relationship between promotion and sales, it would have at its heart the computerized checkout counters that are slowly finding their way into supermarkets across the land. The project was announced two years ago and yesterday, at the annual conference of the A.R.F. at the Waldorf Astoria Hotel, Paul E. J. Gerhold, former president of the foundation, and John S. Coulson, vice president-research of Leo Burnett U.S.A., gave a progress report.

For so many companies the checkout counter is where it is all at and as Mr. Gerhold put it, it is "the place where the end of the chain of distribution meets the end of the chain of advertising and promotion, where supply and demand forces come together to make the market for the brand."

Working with a small number of supermarkets that have installed the scanners for the Universal Product Code, the A.R.F. will on a daily basis get the records of product sales in 20 categories.

Subscribing companies will get that information as well as details of "sales influences"—prevailing prices, records of newspaper, magazine, television advertising as well as outdoor and point-of-sale advertising and records of all coupon activity.

On top of all that, photographs will be taken each day of the supermarket shelves to show what kind of facings each brand is getting and whether it is in stock.

Subscribers will get information on their own as well as competitors' brands.

The project has had slow going because the economy, and protesting labor unions and consumer groups have delayed the installation of the checkout systems. However, Mr. Coulson said the A.R.F. hoped it could begin its "shake-down cruise" next year. Project Payout could cost "well-over $1 million."

The session began with an extremely interesting film in which seven pioneers in marketing research were interviewed by off-camera Rena Bartos, senior vice president of J. Walter Thompson. The majority of the pioneers seemed less than pleased with the state of the art today.

The remainder of the morning was given over to the exploration of such tantalizing topics as pulsing, advertising evaluation, TV diary keeping and biometrics.

Pulsing, or running advertising in bursts, waves or flights rather than consistently, was the subject attacked by William T. Moran, marketing research director of Lever Brothers. His remarks were of a highly technical nature (it was the right place for it) but afterward in a private moment he said that what the research really showed was that pulsing, as all right for a brand with a small ad budget that has a long purchase cycle and is backed by good advertising copy.

Malcolm McNiven, vice president of marketing services of Pillsbury, said these days you never hear research people questioning the fact that advertising programs can be evaluated, only if the company can afford to evaluate. He also noted "a real decline in the development of new ways to measure advertising." Now, he said, people seem to be more interested in refining existing methods.

TV audience research based on diary keeping (used by both Nielsen and Arbitron) is not highly accurate, according to John A. Dimling Jr., vice president and director of research of the National Association of Broadcasters. "We can conclude," he said, "that television diary surveys conducted with a listed telephone household sampling frame are slightly biased because they understate television viewing by all television households."

Television diary surveys are subject to a modest level of nonresponse bias. Households that take part in diary surveys tend to have slightly higher viewing levels than those which do not.

"Diary surveys are subject to response bias. The magnitude of this bias is the most serious of the three studied. Incomplete recording of viewing by diary respondents results in an understatement of viewing levels."

And, finally, Ronald Gatty, a professor at Baruch College, and R. Curtis Gräber of the Walter Reed Army Institute of Research, cautioned the multitude of researchers present that biometrics do indeed exist in human beings and that the time of day, mood, or year that respondents are interviewed can greatly affect research results.

"It should not be surprising that a person's mood, vigor, work efficiency

Leather Soles Enlist Donkey and Elephant

With the help of some creative thinking from Daniel J. Edelman Inc., a public relations concern, the Sole Leather Council has distributed some non-political posters that it hopes will promote its own cause. The posters, under the headline "Campaign in Comfort," are the same except that one features a donkey and the other an elephant. They advise protein snacks for energy, sitting down with legs elevated, frequent changes of socks, the avoidance of tight clothing and overloaded briefcases and, of course, "shoes with genuine leather soles." There had to be a sales pitch in there some place.

and accuracy, as well as attitudes, undergo a rhythmic flux during the day," said Mr. Gräber. Responding with vigor, the audience applauded rhythmically.

Higher Ad Revenues Seen

For the third time this year the Newspaper Advertising Bureau has raised its projection of 1976 advertising revenues. Jack Kaufman, president of the N.A.B., announced at a meeting of the Inland Press Association at the Drake Hotel, Chicago, that the current estimate was a 17 percent increase over last year, bringing the grand total to $9.9 billion.

The breakdown, he said, goes this way: retail advertising $5.7 billion; classified, the fastest growing category, $2.8 billion, and national, $1.5 billion.

Free Enterprise Stressed

Along the free-enterprise trail, Philippine Petroleum reports that it received 22,000 orders for teachers for showings of its "American Enterprise" series of five films. The films, according to their sponsor, depict the nation's economic history from different points of view.

Elsewhere on the trail, Dun's Review, the business publication, is also taking up cudgels in behalf of the system. Dun's is offering businessmen a poster that features the old pointed-finger Uncle Sam from World War I with the legend, "In America, this truth is self-evident . . . PROFITS IS NOT A four-letter word."

A Cause for Neighing

Classic magazine is celebrating its first anniversary with an issue carrying 75 pages of advertising. That's nice. During its first year it carried 345 pages and, since it's published only every other month, that's nice, too. The publication is aimed at the affluent lover of horses and has the subtitle "The Magazine About Horses and Sport." And there are enough interested parties around to allow Classic to increase its circulation rate base with the coming March-April issue to 90,000 from 75,000.

Dollar Declines Abroad On Expectation of Rise In West German Rates

LONDON, Oct. 19 (AP)—The dollar lost ground on most European currency markets today amid expectations that the weekend realignment of joint float currencies would give West German authorities leeway to raise domestic interest rates without putting pressure on the currency relationships. Only the Dutch guilder and the ailing British pound fell marginally against the dollar.

In London, the pound closed at $1.6503, compared with $1.6520 yesterday. In Amsterdam the dollar was worth 2.5870 guilders, up from yesterday's 2.5605.

The French franc, in what Paris brokers called only a temporary recovery, improved against most currencies. The dollar closed in Paris at 4.9880 francs, down from 5.1520 yesterday.

In Frankfurt the dollar lost more than a penny and in Zurich more than a centime. It ended the day at 2.4340 West German marks against yesterday's 2.4455, and at 2.4455 Swiss francs against 2.4460 at yesterday's close.

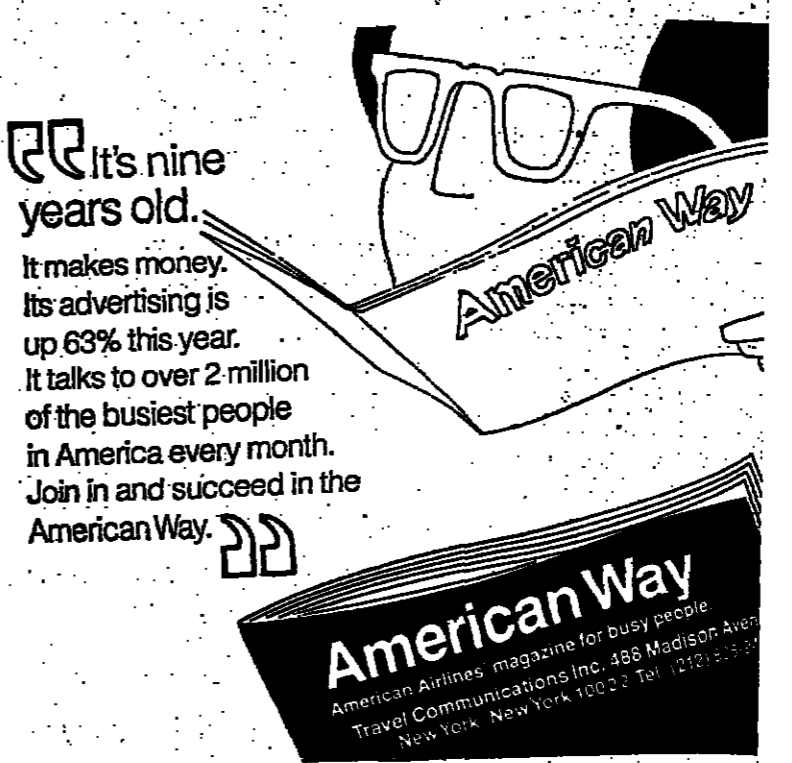

In Milan, the dollar shot up to 878 lire in midmorning interbank trading, but sank again to finish at 869.15, lower than yesterday's $70.06.

Gold bullion prices dropped to $115.375 a troy ounce in London and Zurich, Europe's two major markets. The precious metal closed yesterday at $116.625 in London and $116.375 in Zurich.

Best way out of town? Philadelphia. One way.

A beautiful blonde once drove me to Philadelphia. She also drove my truck. (They're the only two things I have to thank her for.) I suggest, however, you postpone the delights to be gained from bk or bottle, and board the next rail car to sanctify and sanity on the Dela. Ah, yes: Philadelphia. The firm promise of business as usual and mo the same. A pleasurable paucity of insatiable tax mongers. An abundant fully improved industrial land nearby and millions of square feet of a space within. Both available at reasonable rates. (That's a diplomatic way of saying cheap money, my friend.) Follow, then. Follow by canoe, by ox cart or on foot if not by train. Fo with blonde, if you insist. Follow your nose to the coupon below and fo for additional information. Tempus fugit. Yes; indeed. (Something about that city you're in reminds me of Vaudeville.)

The New Philadelphia Story features eight "billion dollar" banks. The east coast location (just 90 miles from New York), and transportation to market—regional, national and global. Eight hundred prime industrial with utilities at the curb. And an economic development corporation to do anything, including low cost, long term financing for up to 100% of development costs— with a program of only 4% interest on half those for industrial uses. Our specially prepared reports on Philadelphia's financing, office space, and the city itself, tell. To get them, use the coupon, or call.

THE CONTROVERSY RAGES -- MULTINATIONAL CORPORATIONS AND PROSPECTS

Are they the saviors of the future or the woes of the developing nations? Multinational corporations have controlled vast segments of the world's economy. Their complex structure transcends national boundaries. They touch everyone's life in many ways. Yet, we know very little about them. Here is an in-depth and objective study striving to sift facts from fiction and separate realities from fantasies.

"One of the most carefully balanced accounts of the major issues involved in multinational corporations that I have seen"

—Senator Frank Church, Chairman Subcommittee on Multinational Corporations

"Probably the most compact current source of up-to-date data on the subject"

—Richard S. Tedlow, Jr. Under-Secretary-General, U.N.

"Not all books on multinational corporations contain such knowledge and understanding. It is a constructive contribution"

—Henry S. Dasso, Chairman of the Board, U.S. GI 2071-18

"It is the most valuable contribution to the whole question of multinational corporations and their role"

—Dr. Harry King, President, University of Michigan

A CONVERSATION BETWEEN

NORMAN MAILER

JOHN EHRlichman

MAILER: I am all but convinced it to a great extent, if not entirely, Watergate was a CIA operation. It seems that the first scudation (at the White House) is of course it was a CIA operation, and the CIA will probably be care of it very neatly, because they are more embarrassed than we are. Wasn't that really the attitude?

EHRlichman: It was obviously something that occurred to Richard Nixon in June, '73, as some of us have since discovered.

This summer an extraordinary encounter took place between Norman Mailer and John Ehrlichman. They talked about Ehrlichman's first novel The Company, the role of the CIA in the Watergate break-in, the Nixon White House, the changes in Ehrlichman's own life since his resignation as the United States' number two domestic policy maker.

The Mailer-Ehrlichman conversation—together with a long introductory essay by Mailer—appears in the December issue of CHIC magazine. As does CHIC's usual mix of fantasy, fashion, wit and hard facts.

Copies of CHIC's debut issue are already very hard to come by. The Mailer-Ehrlichman issue will be even scarcer. To be sure you get yours, go to your newsstand now. The December CHIC is waiting there.

Yankees fans!

It's the year of the Yankees and here's a great treat for Yankee fans, young and old—a beautifully crafted pewter medallion in sculptural detail.

This medallion can be proudly worn by any roofer for the Bronx Bombers. It makes a wonderful gift, and for all baseball fans it's a lasting souvenir of the 1976 Yanks.

Be a good girner. Go swallow your nose.

The Queen of Girners, above, just swallowed her nose. To qualify, lose your chin, cross your eyes, make faces like last year's Limburger. Girning? It's an old Scotch word for snarling and some old scotch sure helps. Founder is old Laugh-

Iner Gary Owens, who put out the call for Silly Putty faces on his L.A. radio show. He may look straight in the picture, but "of course I'm girning. If I weren't, my face would be too horrible to look at." Life got you down? Girm and bear it.

Joanne Herring has staggering wealth and boundless energy. Once a local TV star, the Houston socialite's produced and narrated a TV film about Lafayette. An exercise nut, she keeps a trampoline in the bedroom.

Brian Moore has finally hit big money with his 11th novel, The Doctor's Wife... the third time he's written from inside a woman's head. The Irish expatriate couldn't live anyplace but America. "It's the Imperial Rome of our time."

Our friend Flicka. Frederica von Stade is "Flicka" to her friends and the mezzo with the mostest to opera buffs. Her career began barely 6 years ago when Mr. Bing plucked her out of the Met National Auditions. "I've worked hard," she says, "but it's all been rather magical!"

Fools Crow sweet Sioux life a medicine man 63 years... he's overnight... his herbal birth copions to men travelled with Bill's Wild West was senior Indi at Wounded Ku

Real tiger. Princeton cheerleader John Phillips designed a do-it-yourself atomic bomb for a physics term paper. It's simple, inexpensive and easy to build... more sophisticated than the Hiroshima bomb? Yale and Harvard better watch out.

Martin & Charisse. At 62 and 55, Tony and Cyd are the doyens of song 'n' dance. With his pipes and her stems, why not? They've been married 28 years, ever since he recaptured her from Howard Hughes.

Bernadette Peters was a Hollywood bust at first. Now she's the prettiest Charlie you ever saw... on CBS's All's Fair. On Hollywood Squares, she's a semi-regular, "which means I don't have my own box." She's into vegetarianism, non-TM meditation, bombing around Hollywood freeways.

Jimmy Caan man ball at Michigan they sent me home in his dreams of glory 2-month-old son Sc him to be a free safe terback... or a violi

Want to get your hands on some fun? Like to grab onto some laughs, drama, adventure, pathos, surprises... and yes, some very stimulating ideas?

Why, bless you, have you ever come to the right place. Pick up the nearest People and, zingo, you'll be in the middle of the happiest happening in magazines.

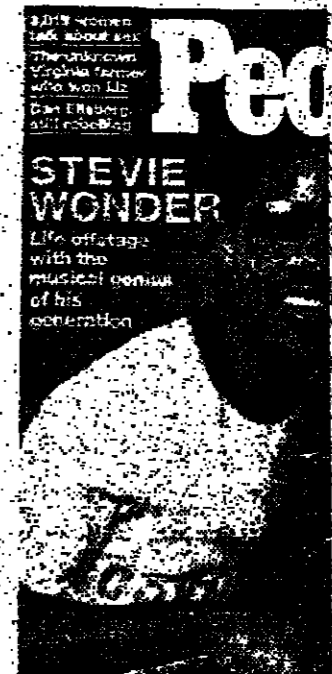

Look how People's soaring. Our circulation's up there at 1,800,000. Already! Which means 10,500,000* very with-it readers. Which means... some market.

Because these are exactly the people any advertiser of people products wants to talk to. They're the young, educated, prospering, urban men and women who latch onto new ideas and turn them into trends and phenomena. They read People cover-to-cover... front, middle and back... because it's their kind of humanity-in-print.

If you want proof that advertisers have bought the People idea all the way, look at the variety of ads. Food, cosmetics, tobacco, cars, apparel, liquor, appliances, and on and on. And there's more impressive proof:

We went from 43rd to 14th in PIB ad pages in the first half! Yes, People's the magazine with the momentum. The new media option. The new marketplace.

Suddenly, it's the place to be.

People
